INDIVIDUAL EDUCATION.

Harold E. Gorst, the son of the wellknown English statesman, 3.r John Gorst, is the author of an article on "An Educational Revolution," which North American Review. Mr. Gorst condemns the existing educational system, which, in his opinion, tends to the suppression of individuality and to mould after one uniform pattern all those who come under its influence. In Mr. Gorst's judgment, the education of the youth of the country should be so arranged for that it kinds of work in which their lives are Higgins Drug Co. to be passed. He suggests the establishment of a general elementary school in which the individual bents of the children might be studied, and of complementary schools to which, when their bents have been discovered. the children might be sent for education in special lines. He says:

"The American system is far mor efficiently organized than the English for Jaundice, Chillis. Fever, Malaria J. A. Swenson, Watertown, Wis., "Ten system. It is no idle boast that a direct path bas been provided, in the former, from the gutter to the university. But education in England is still in a hopeless muddle. The elementary schools are confused and unsettled; they overlap in the most wasteful way; and there is no road, except by way of scholarships for the privileged few, to higher education ed adrift at the age of fourteen, fitted for nothing, and without individuality initiative or the smallest realization of aptitude for anything in particular. The thoroughly efficient organization of the United States, coupled with the fact that the child of the poorest laborer can get a free education right tog so s through to the age of eighteen, proves on the other hand, how high a value the American people set upon the advantages of a school and college training; and how ready they are to support and foster any institution which they believe to be in the interests of the nation and of the individual."
