"NO BABY, NO BALLOT"

Many expedients have been tried as a proper basis for the granting of the franchise, but the editor-priest, Father Phelan, of St. Louis comes forward with a new and startling plan.

He seems to be very much in earnest in making the family the unit of the franchise, and he has begun an active propaganda with the slogan, "No baby, no ballot."

To counteract any tendency towards race suicide which may exist, he proposes, in other words, to give the ballot only to those citizens who can boast of a baby in the house.

Since the reform bill in England, in 1832, many changes have been made in the franchise qualifications, from forty-shillings free-holder to the "latch-key" voter, which practically means universal suffrage.

Property and educational qualifications have been widely discussed and frequently adopted, but never before, so far as we are aware, have we had the slogan, "No baby, no ballot."

We have a shrewd idea that this is a blow aimed secondarily if not primarily at the woman suffragists.

When the childless Mme. De Stael asked Napoleon who was the greatest woman in France—expecting him to say "Mme. De Stael"—he replied, "The woman who gives the most children to France."

She never forgave him. The suffragists who are asking for the ballot would probably be as much stunned as was Mme. De Stael if they should find that they had been given the franchise, but on the basis of "No baby, no ballot."

COTTON SPINNING AND PRINTING.

This country grows five sixths of the commercial cotton crop of the world, but it spins only one-fifth of it. Out of 130,000,000 spindles in the world, this country possesses but 26,000,000. The Foss syndicate in Boston is attempting to increase the spindles in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and all through the rest of New England there is a conviction that the time has come to put up more American cotton mills.

American is not keeping step with the rest of the world in this matter, especially with England and Japan.

Of the 26,000,000 spindles in this country about 11,000,000 are located in the cotton states amid the cotton fields. New England has no intention of abdicating in favor of the South.

New England has no advantages of raw material, fuel or labor, and yet it does the larger share of the spinning in this country. And so far as weaving is concerned, the situation is even worse; and so far as printing is concerned, not a yard is printed from one end of the cotton belt to the other.

And yet William Hartley Chadwick, of Providence, R. I., says there would be good money in cotton printing in the South.

It is a most pleasing thing to note the disposition over the whole country to appropriate as "our countryman" all of those men who in times past have displayed sterling manhood and exalted virtues, without regard to the lines that once divided sympathies and checked generous acknowledgment of fine characters.

The placing of the statue of General Lee in the stately hall at Washington has furnished occasion for many expressions whose tenor should be known and appreciated in every section of the country.

The Rochester Herald, for instance, expresses the following happy and commendable sentiment. It says: "The men of the South would be less than men if they failed to remember their heroes, and of their heroes, General Lee is easily the first. He is deserving of such remembrance and honor. There was no nobler man in all the world than Lee. No one has ever been able to point to a single dishonest act or ignoble motive in his entire career. General Lee revered his conscience as his king, and he always strove to do the right as he saw it. His mind was large, his character valiant. One can see today that he was one of Lincoln's ideal men, with malice toward none, with charity for all."

It was upon to secession, but when his states receded, he felt the call of his people and fought their battles. "Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, fought as a Massachusetts Adams should have done on the Northern side, but he has said that if he had been in Lee's place he would have done just what Lee did. To call Lee a traitor 40 years after, does not come graciously from lips that eulogize Washington, the other noted rebel of Virginia, who dared to fight the battles of his people against the British king who demanded the allegiance of the thirteen American colonies. Fortunately, we have reached the stage—at least, most of us have reached it—when we can think of Lee not as a Virginian, nor as a Southerner, merely, but as an American of whom all Americans may justly be proud. He was one of us, and his valor belongs to our history. When some mischievous Englishman said to Charles Francis Adams, the American minister to England, and the father of the Charles Francis Adams whom we have quoted, 'Those Southerners fought well,' Adams replied: 'Yes; they are my countrymen, and beyond a doubt he was as great a warrior as America has produced. His name deserves to stand in the old Senate halls, and well shall it be if the youth of this land, of South and North alike, consider long and earnestly the kind of man he was, and find inspiration in his life.'
