Paris, April 8.—The Turks have renewed their attacks in the Brusa sector of Asia Minor, according to official advices received here today at the French foreign office.

Fears are entertained for the safety of the entire Greek expeditionary forces.

It is said that six thousand wounded Greek soldiers are in hospitals in Brusa alone.

THE WEST SHOWS TO EXHIBIT HERE 'ALL NEXT WEEK

American Legion Sends Delegation to Kinston To Inspect West Shows: Find Them Absolutely Clean.

A delegation from the Wayne post of the American Legion went to Kinston Wednesday night to see that the shows that are booked here next week were as represented and this delegation says that it is a clean show and that everybody named satisfied in Kinston with it.

The best people in Kinston, were on the ground to see the show and to enjoy the show and to see that the show was as represented and that everybody named satisfied in Kinston with it.

The Goldsboro show is the best thing they have ever seen with any carnival company.

The wild animal show has the most perfectly trained dogs and ponies that you ever saw. This show really appeals to the ladies and children.

Miss Mae Quincy, the young lady that does the high dive, has made a score of friends in Kinston and has daily been seen with all the young folks of the city. She seems to be very happy when the time comes for her act and she always has the most pleasant smile and does not seem to realize the seriousness of the act which she performs.

The West Shows will arrive here Sunday in their own train of cars, but the wild animals and horses only will be taken off the train until early Monday, when the unloading will be accomplished.

The American Legion is trying to arrange a hand concert for Sunday afternoon in the Park, in which only sacred music will be played.

Mr. West's motto from the start has been and is "clean, wholesome attractions"—and these shows carry letters of reference from the best people where they have showed, including ministers.

If the weather is good the Legion should have good crowds attending every night.

IMPORTANT TAX NOTICE I have been very lenient with the tax payers of Wayne county and the law puts the penalty on May 1st next. The schools are sadly in need of funds, and I will thank you to come in and settle.

W. D. GRANT, Sheriff, Goldsboro, N. C., April 7, 1921.

WONDERFUL RESPONSE

The Characteristic Spirit of These Glorious Golden-Hearted Goldsboro People Was Life Last Night.

The Goldsboro Hospital—the voluntary creation of the Goldsboro and Wayne county people for the charitable care of the needy sick of the city and county—the common pride of our people and the crowning glory of their characteristic philanthropy, was the potent inspiration that brought our people together last night at the citizens get together meeting and banquet and which has never been surpassed in our city's history.

In fact, it is needless to attempt a portrayal of the meeting—for it was so representative of Goldsboro—so generally attended by men and women in common—so responsive to the spirit of the occasion that any report we might attempt of it in type would appear tame to our readers, who were themselves present in such large numbers.

Capt. N. O'Berry, as chairman of the committee of citizens who were the originators and host of the banquet, made an ideal, toast master, while the musical program of the evening was superlatively enjoyed.

The comprehensive report of Mr. Geo. C. Royall, chairman of the Hospital Board of Trustees, of the origin, activities, travails and needs of the Hospital, was so admirable, so enlightening and awakening, that it instantly inspired interest and purpose alike, that shall redound to the Hospital's welfare.

He was followed in turn by Judge Allen, A. H. Edgerton, Joe Rosenthal, and Chas. Dewey, all of whom spoke words of encouragement, appreciation and inspiration, but the address of the evening was that of Hon. Josephus Daniels, a speech that has no equal in the history of the city.

ed even himself and that surpassed anything ever before heard in Goldsboro. It was a classic in a class all its own, and our sincere regret is that we cannot give it in full.

As Mr. Daniels rose, in response to Capt. O'Berry's presentation, he was greeted by an ovation of applause, the entire assemblage rising as they applauded.

Mr. Daniels said in part: It is the easiest thing in the world to tell somebody else how to invest his money to secure big dividends. I am not now speaking of the employment of money in farms or factories or merchandise or banks. To be sure, wise investments upon which our civilization rests, is fundamental. Chambers of commerce and newspapers are established to tell where money can be placed to bring the largest return by cooperation and through corporations. Always, however, the individual insight or judgment will control a man who has the talent—or is it genius?—for money-making. Those of us who lack that talent often break the commandment, "Thou shalt not covet," when we see our friends who seem to have a second sight about making money. Mind you, I say "covet" the talent—not the money. We would not envy them what talent and embracing opportunity has brought. We would only like to have the kind of psychology that lets us in on the ground floor with them—that's all.

But I am rather to speak now of the secondary investment—the use of money in good causes to bring the largest continuing dividend in human uplift and human mending and in human equipment. First of all, you must have made some money and saved some. Therefore, the primary duty is thrift and saving. John Wesley compassed it all in one sentence which he emphasized and re-emphasized to the early Methodists in "Make all you can; save all you can; give all you can."

There is more wisdom in that sentence than in all the homilies of the schools.

The old-fashioned rich Southern planter knew little or nothing of cooperation or community benevolence. He was a ruler of many people, with large responsibilities for their health and direction. And with few exceptions he was humane and kind. But his benefactions on a large scale began and ended with his family and his plantation. The old English supremacy of the family, keeping all the property in the family, was the dominant thought. Hence, you found few large gifts to education, to hospitals, to orphanages, to community uplift in the days of the large prosperity of the Old South. It is our duty to preserve their fine traditions but make presidents for ourselves in new ways in our own day and generation.

The public hospital in our part of the world is a new realization of community duty to our brother. As long as men are well and have steady employment at good wages they do not wish for assistance or for sympathy or for favor. It is only when sickness falls that the public hospital becomes the perpetual Good Samaritan. Years ago, long before most of our towns realized that a hospital ready for the treatment of the sick was a necessity, the good people of Goldsboro had generously provided an institution here. Its benefactions are beyond computation, and they have been extended not alone to your own community but also to those adjacent to your city. It is the crown of all the good things which are interwoven with the life of this city. Its enlargement offers the opportunity for an investment which will bring dividends that no wars or reservations or treaties can lessen or take away.

I have often thought, if I had millions—(see how easy it is for a man without them to dispose of them)—a large part of my investment in helping mankind would go toward the building of hospitals. I believe the plan of Mr. Carnegie in giving libraries would produce the largest dividend. I would build a hospital and expect the people to provide for its upkeep. But as I have no millions, and I do not see a millionaire who confesses to the distinction (he may be here and dodging the income tax officer), the privilege is offered to those of smaller or small means to do for this community something better than any one benefactor could do with all his money. And that is to have a part in the noble philanthropy of giving to the hospital for opening new eyes and making the lame to walk. "Greater miracles shall ye do," was Christ's promise to His followers. Did He not mean that He would make it possible through surgery and scientific research and faith and hospital treatment that life should be lengthened and more sunshine come into it?

The only thing that stands between every community and the agencies of blessings needed is the lack of perfect cooperation and giving "as the Lord has prospered you," to quote Scripture. Those of us who are not rich wait for the rich to give in large sums, and the rich wait for a pooling of the gifts of all. And while in some communities each waits for the other, men and women and children die without the care and treatment which cannot be given in homes large or small. If half a dozen men here should agree to pay all that is needed for hospital blessings, the other citizens of Goldsboro ought not to deny themselves the privilege of receiving the blessing of their mites and the equal partnership of service. We deny to the rich the monopoly of the soothing and restoring care and ministrations for which a hospital is maintained. We each must have our share of the benediction that falls upon all who love others more than they love their own comfort.

The day is not far distant when every county, and every large city, will erect and maintain hospitals as they build and maintain public schools. Then no persons needing surgical treatment or care shall lack them because they have not the money to pay for the best medicals kill. Many physicians—(I uncover to them)—carry the expense of ministering to the poor which ought to be borne equally by the whole community. "I am proud of ye," said the great surgeon to William McClure. North Carolina is proud of its surgeons and physicians who give their skill and long vigils to those who can give them no pay except the golden fee of gratitude. But, while the doctor who shuts his heart to the poor is a blot upon the noble profession, the duty rests alike upon all members of the community. We cannot say to doctors, who must live like the rest of us, that they must be the only benefactors of a community. If so, they will receive all the promises vouchsafed to those who find it more blessed to give than to receive. The rest of the community would be bankrupt in the dividends that come from giving and giving until it makes the heart glad.

At the conclusion of Mr. Daniels' address he was given another ovation. The toast-master then asked for a rising vote of thanks to the Goldsboro Womens Club, under whose auspices

GREAT BRITAIN'S INDUSTRIAL UPHEAVAL SERIOUS

(By Associated Press)

London, April 8.—Great Britain's industrial crisis was more intensified this morning, and the impending upheaval was rendered more ominous when the national union of railway employees decided to join the striking miners, and the latter refused to enter conference with their employers and representatives of the government looking to a settlement of their differences, and all hopes of adjustment through that medium, therefore, seem blasted.

The reason given by the miners for this refusal is that the return of pump men and engineers to work must first be effected, and the second reason is that after that the miners must be entirely free from any previous pledges, before considering a conference.

LIKE "HUMORESQUE"

"Heliotope" a Picture of a "Different" Type at Messenger Friday.

At last that elusive object for which all the movie-makers are continually seeking—the picture that is "different."

Cosmopolitan Productions achieved it in "Humoresque"; now, it is said, the same producers have done it again with "Heliotope", the screen version of Richard Washburn Child's popular story. It will be shown at the Messenger on Friday. While the romance of two young people is developed to a happy ending in this picture, the main theme is that of a father who sacrifices his life to prevent disgrace from befalling his daughter. It is the story of a sinister woman felled by a regenerated convict and of the happiness that comes to the latter's daughter as the result of his heroic action.

Thrills aplenty and a finale that is surprising as it is satisfying is promised in "Heliotope".

the banquet was served, and to the several individual ladies who had specially prepared it and the decorated tables, to those who had rendered the delightful musical program and to the young ladies who had acted as waitresses—and this was given spontaneously.

Mr. Lionel Well then gave notice for the various volunteer canvassing teams to meet at 9.30 this morning for the canvass of the city, and with a song the great festive occasion stood adjourned.

A jolly and hilariously enjoyed feature of the evening was the original song to Mr. Daniels, written by Mrs. Mary E. Morris, of this city, and sung with zest by the entire assemblage. The canvass of the city is on as we go to press—the results of which will be announced later.
