Never before were there so many books on the market dealing with the subject of Will Discipline. They bear various captions, such as "Control of the Will", "How to Strengthen the Will", "Will Power", etc., but they all aim at instructing people how they may develop determination, how they may acquire greater control over their weak wills.

The will is a faculty of the soul which, like the intellect, should be trained from childhood. The discipline of the reformatory, of the penitentiary, of the military whool, may keep the will in forced submission, but the pent up inclinations of the institution inmate are usually given a freer rein with the grant of libe
