Reducing the Navy

The incapacity of the Republican leadership in Congress is illustrated by the proposal, which seems to be seriously made, to cripple the navy by cutting down its fuel supply and by throwing the Annapolis class back to civillife. The navy having been reduced by international agreement, the Republicans would now reduce it further without any international agreement.

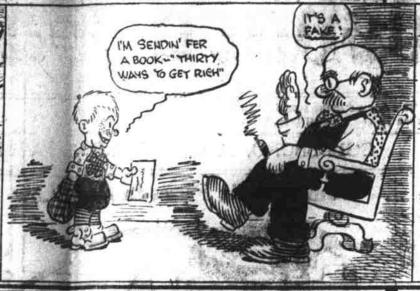

It was for our advantage to reduce the number of our capital ships because four other nations joined us in this. Our naval exepenses were reduced, but our relative naval strength was not; in comparison with other nations we retain substantially our naval rank. We disarm no further than other nations do. But it make some further political thereby secured, the undersigned that an action as above entitled has capital by a program of economy, and when there is a question of making political highest bidder for cash, the propcapital the Republicans do not erty therein conveyed, described as allow considerations of national safety to interfere.
