ning for Effect an Error Into Which Really Brilliant People Sometimes Stray.

Some of us are always amused at the different ways in which people try to be clever or pretend to be ga; and lively. Some show it by spending a vast amount of money on dinners and being rude to waiters. Others chatter all the time, and imagine that if they show their front teeth steadily for several hours somebody will call them brilliant conversationalists. Some like to make a great noise and carry on a perpetual fire of banter, of which "You're another" is a vivid spec imen of the repartee. Others, on the other hand, imagine that if they are daringly decollette and make goo-goo at everybody posterity 'eyes' range them among the great fascina-tors of their generation. Not a few find a huge fund of hilarity in placing a cushion over the door and a piece of soap in the hed, while enough and loud enough they may eventually utter a mot and claim the fame of being a wit forever and ever afterward. As a matter of fact, however, a brilliant light conversationalist is one of the rarest things in the whole world. Such a one is born, though time and experience may claborate the gift.

Lots of people talk-talk an awful lot-but very few are worth listening to. Above everything else in gaiety there must be no sense of "strain. Pletter be silent than force your hulies not so much in what is said as the whimsical way a person says it. That is why so many books of humor invariably get "alledged" mentally in-
