THE NEED INCREASES.

Each week just now shows the necessity, based upon good business grounds, for a tobacco warehouse for New Berne.

The JOURNAL, undoubtedly, has this more forcibly presented to it than any other else, as the farmers naturally drift into this office, especially those who are cultivating tobacco, and who are personally interested in seeing a tobacco warehouse established in New Berne.

In another column of this issue, can be found an account of one of these tobacco raisers, which is only the experience of one out of many which are told the JOURNAL.

The practicability of producing a fine marketable tobacco in this immediate section has been demonstrated. The soil and climate have been found congenial, and the quantity and quality produced have made our local tobacco farmers feel that they have found a money crop of the right kind.

And the best of this tobacco cultivation is that the farmers are not attempting to raise tobacco to the exclusion of other crops.

The need of a tobacco warehouse here is one which appeals to those who would build one for a profitable investment, to the local merchants of this city, and to the farmers of this section.

It only takes a little figuring to prove the profitableness of the establishment of a tobacco warehouse for a town. The results are apparent at once. Where money has been scarce, it brings in plenty. Where trade has been dull, it is at once enlivened.

Where the farmer has been engaged in raising cotton, barely making a profit out of it, he finds in tobacco a crop that is a sure money one, a crop fairly certain, as any crop can be.

The tobacco trade, which a warehouse will bring to New Berne, is one which ought to appeal to every one, and the projectors of the warehouse should be offered every inducement in their efforts to establish one.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

The politicians "claim" column is likely to show some changes before November.

The Caucasian "valedictory to the Democrats," has the too familiar declaration sound of "we are the party," come and join us. You Democrats are in the wrong.

How was it that Col. Tipton escaped Joe Caldwell, and got to the Greensboro conference, without being found out? Now give him another lecture, Joe.

The failure of Hilton Hughes & Co. the big New York dry goods house, is being used by both the silverites and goldites as an illustration of the pernicious financial system advocated by the other side.

Now that all the gold bugs of North Carolina have left the State to attend the Indianapolis Convention, why not declare a quarantine against their return?

There seems to be a good deal of unnecessary alarm that North Carolina might be purchased for McKinley. In some quarters an inflation of the currency by tapping Hanna's "bar" might not prove objectionable to those engaged in the "tapping."

There is a good deal of sorrow over the fact that the real Mark Hanna, of boodle fame, was not actually in North Carolina last week, as reported.

Will Guthrie capture Watson, or

Watson capture Guthrie, is the question.

It might be just as well as not for Cy. Watson to occasionally cast a glance to see what Judge Russell is doing. No use of being "buncoed" even in politics.

Considering, according to the News-Observer, the smallness in numbers, insignificance in names, lightness in avoidpoups and weakness in mental caliber of the Greensboro conference of gold bugs, a good deal of importance seems to be given to their movements.

More Beer—Less Pulque.

Mexico is to have more beer and less pulque, which is the curse of the native Mexican. The effect upon the nerves is singular, and it almost forces men into physical struggles of which they are unconscious at the time. The number of deaths from fighting in pulquerias is incredible. In every great festival, particularly when there are displays of fire works, the police have hundreds of persons to look after from drinking drug pulque. The vendors at times become so bold in the sale of this drink that they declare they must sell it to those wanting it or lose their trade, regardless of the struggles of the Government to remove the evil consequences resulting from it. In Mexico City at least 250,000 use it in preference to water or any other drink. It is said by some who have given thought to the matter that 75,000 gallons of it are consumed in that city daily.

But now, according to Mr. R. M. Burke, United States Consul at Chihuahua, a brewery has been established with the capacity of 35,000 barrels per annum, equipped with the best modern American machinery. The company proposes to establish branch supply depots, and will erect cold storage houses for the better keeping of the beer in all the principal towns of Mexico. The stockholders of this company are among the most progressive and wealthy business men in the city.

The present price of a glass of beer in Mexico being 25 cents, (Mexican currency.) the cut in the price to 10 cents which is proposed will, it is thought, greatly increase the consumption and proportionately decrease the demand for pulque. This is one method by which the Mexican Government hopes indirectly to put a stop to this obnoxious compound.—Ex.

Disappointed Contributors.

After making all reasonable allowance for the disappointment of unsuccessful writers after admitting that no honest editor can expect to be popular among contributors, the plain fact remains that the casual contributor does not understand his true position. His demands are frequently unreasonable, and there need be little hesitation in saying that he receives far more consideration than he deserves. "Not to answer a civil letter on business is at once ill bred and unbusinesslike, whether the recipient occupies an editorial chair or not." So writes "A Contributor," but the observation is unsound and absurd. In my private capacity I receive, every day, civil and even fulsome letters on business, offering to lend me money, to sell me cigars, wine, baby's socks, and a thousand things. The writers offer me something I do not require or cannot afford to buy, and I answer, as no doubt "A Contributor" answers, by silence.

In strict logic, the uninvited contributor stands in precisely the same position as the volunteer money lender. When unasked he sends his goods on approval, in the face of a notice to the effect that rejected articles cannot be returned, he stands in the same position as the tobaccoists who send out sample boxes of cigarettes. But he obtains far more courteous treatment than is accorded to the tradesman. An attempt, at the least, is made to read the most ill written manuscript; some times it is even sent up to the printers in the faint hope that, after they have wrestled with it, the meaning of the scrawl may be extracted. If it is rejected, it is almost invariably returned, whether stamps have been inclosed or not. Such is the practice of nearly all reputable publications; there are, however, a few exceptions in the shape of papers which give distinct notice that they will not take the trouble to return unsuitable contributions. These papers are perfectly well known, their rule of business is strictly honest, and the man who runs the risk of submitting articles to them and loses his venture has none but himself to blame.

River of Molten Lava. Early Friday night, Nov. 6, 1880, a bright light was reflected from the clouds above Mauna Loa that increased brilliantly until morning. All day Saturday great clouds of smoke could be seen at Hilo, fifty miles away, rising from the mountains as from a city that had been swept by a great conflagration. Saturday evening the mountain was wrapped in clouds, but toward midnight they scattered, revealing a spectacle that was magnificent beyond all description.

The summit crater was emitting a dense smoke, lighted up by the molten lake of lava. Below, on the mountain side, was an embayment from which the lava was running down like a river. Not a break could be seen from the outlet to the very head of the fiery mass. It was a continuous stream of glowing lava, heated to incandescence, moving steadily down the mountain side. It was like a living creature gliding out of its fiery prison house all aglow.

Squirming and gliding in the mountain blaze, Like a great serpent with a skin of gold. Its progress was rapid considering the distance of the point of view, and subsequent observation along the line of the flow proved that the velocity must have been tremendous. David Hitchcock, who was camping on Mauna Kea at the time of this outbreak, saw a spectacle that few human eyes have ever beheld. "We stood," he writes, "on the very edge of that flowing river of rock.

"Oh, what a sight it was! Not twenty feet from us was this immense bed of rock slowly moving forward with irresistible force, bearing on its surface huge rocks and immense boulders of tons' weight as water would carry a toy. The whole front edge was one bright red mass of solid rock incessantly breaking off from the towering mass and rolling down to the foot of it, to be again covered by another avalanche of white hot rocks and sand. The whole mass at its front edge was from twelve to thirty feet in height. Along the entire line of its advance it was one crash of rolling sliding, tumbling, red-hot rock.

"We could hear no explosions while we were near the flow, only a tremendous roaring like 10,000 blast furnaces all at work at once." This was the most extensive flow of recent years, and its progress from the interior plain through the dense forests above Hilo and out on to the open levels close to the town was startling and menacing enough. Through the woods especially it was a turbulent, seething mass that topped over mammoth trees and licked up streams of water, and day and night kept up an unintermitting cannonade of explosions.

The steam and imprisoned gases would burst the congealing surface with loud detonations that could be heard for many miles. It was not an infrequent thing for parties to camp out close to the flow every night. Ordinarily a lava flow moves sluggishly and congeals so rapidly that what seems like hardihood in the narrative is in reality calm judgment, for it is perfectly safe to be in the close vicinity of a lava stream, and even to walk on its surface as soon as one would be inclined to walk on cooling iron in a foundry. This notable flow finally ceased within half a mile of Hilo, where its black form is a perpetual reminder of a marvelous deliverance from destruction.—Honolulu Gazette.

Marvelous Results. From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderson, of Dimondia, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the result was almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at River Junction she was 'brought down' with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottle free at F. B. Duff's Drug Store, Regular size 50c, and $1.00.
