THE COTTON MARKETS.

Special.
November 26.
The news from Liverpool today has been of a most discouraging character. The spot sales were only 10,000 and spot prices 1-3/4 lower and futures 3-4 lower. (This is equal to 10-100 in our money).

Special.
EUROPEANS believe in a very large crop of cotton; and with receipts continuing on such a scale that transportation in some quarters is inadequate, even to move it is strange they should entertain this opinion.

Special.
AMERICANS feel more favorable to cotton as they have not forgotten that the crop is a very early one and the season has been unusually favorable gathering and for marketing. It is thought there will be some diminution in the movement next week.

Special.
True falling off is necessary so as to stabilize the market at this period.

WORK NEVER CEASES.

Three Shifts of Men on at Washington Navy Yard. Experiments With New Shells.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 26.—There have been since Monday three shifts working in the gun shop at the Navy Yard.

They are employed on some special experimental work on one of the big thirteen inch lathes, and the rest of the extra men are distributed among eight machines in the gun shop and the gun carriage mechanism shop, finishing up the work on the Iowa's armament.

The work is being done quietly and without parade, but the fact that it is being done at all aroused considerable interest among those who knew, and has given rise to the usual question of its pending war.

"The work on the Iowa's armament," said an officer this morning, "is being pushed to make up for time lost in the delivery of certain forgings. There was some delay in placing the contracts, so that the contractors themselves are hardly to be blamed. But the yard was a little behindhand with its portion of the vessel's equipment, so the work is being hurried now to bring us right up to date.

The most interesting feature of the night work, however, is in connection with an experimental shell, which, if as successful as the Navy Department has reason to hope, will make a decided change in modern warfare.

The new projectile is known as the Gatman shell. It is already covered by patents. Its inventors have satisfied the Navy Department by practical experiments that there is a great deal to be hoped from it, and they have consequently been granted the use of certain machines in the gun shop to prepare the experiment on a much larger scale, still at their own expense.

The object of the new shell is to be safely fire an immense charge of high explosive from an ordinary gun. The explosive shell now in use in great quantity by all the powers of the world is simply a ponderous mass of steel intended to pierce among and fortifications, and is aided in its destructive work by a charge of twenty or thirty pounds of ordinary powder. Nobody so far has succeeded in utilizing any great quantity of high explosive like gun cotton or nitro-glycerine, in an ordinary shell, because the shell charge was exploded by the shock accompanying the discharge of the gun.

Now, Zetinski's pneumatic gun was the nearest approach to success and in its own field has been very successful. The gas of as much as 1,000 pounds of dynamite and explosive gelatine have been safely fired in his pneumatic gun, but the shot has a comparatively short range and very low velocity, more resembling mortar fire than that of a rifle. In fact, one of the air gun projectiles might almost be dodged by an active little torpedo boat at a range of a mile or two.

But the new shell is a daring departure. It is a mere frame of steel six feet long and twelve inches in diameter, carrying 200 or 400 pounds of wet gun cotton. It is like a soap bubble inflated with hydrogen and depending for the damage it will do on the shock of its explosion rather than on the flying fragments of the shell itself.

The most ingenious feature of the shell, however, as well as the most daring, is that it is open at the rear end. Such a thin shell of steel would be crushed by the immense gas pressure in the chamber of the gun. But the inventor has fitted a piston arrangement into the open rear end. This is shoved up by the expansion of the firing charge and requires the pressure inside and outside the thin shell.

Even with this safety device the shell will be fired with a much lower velocity than that of an armor piercing projectile. It will not be expected to pierce armor plates at all, only to reach its mark, after which the explosion will do the rest. This is of course means economy in the fighting charge of powder, which is an immense saving in using a great gun.

Three hundred pounds of this cotton exploded on the deck or against the side of a modern battleship would demolish her. It would also wreck an armor plating defense turret or blow a whole section of a masonry fort to atoms, to say nothing of killing every being within a wide radius by the shock of its explosion. The contact between guns and armor has gone on for a long time, and such was the success in penetrating armor plates that mere armor piercing projectiles were in danger of being discounted. Something radical had to be discovered on the offensive side of the problem, and in the new soap bubble shell the Navy Department thinks it has it.

HOOP'S Sarsaparilla has over and over again proved by its cures, when all other preparations failed, that it is the One True BLOOD Purifier.
