Life and Half Life.

It is frequently necessary to the gaining of daily bread that a buman being stay in one spot for a term of years. It should not be always, however. The individual who is rooted to one spot and sees no more of life than is manifest among the neighbors and chums who are exactly like bimself is mentally and spiritually a dwarf. He grows fall of prejudices and cranky notions. Actions the most innocent in themselves appear to him full of all wickedness, because they run counter to his stiff and narrow prejudices. The little ailments, gossip and infinitesimal events in the lives of his acquaintances assume gigantic proportions.

To an catsider the person who has taken root in one spot affords material for infinite amusement. The ruralist visiting the city, the narrow lived city dweller visiting the country have been subject for joke time out of mind, and small blame to those who laugh at them.

Only the person who has traveled, who has seen life and nature in many phases, is well rounded and really intelligent. It does men and women good to get away from their own little cabin now and then and take in the fact that there are people handsomer. more graceful, learned and gifted than themselves and their neighbors. They learn that the matters which seem mountains to them at home are really pinheads in the the manufacturing states of the north, grand round up. They become tolerant, wise, broad minded, better mannered and better looking.

There is really and truly no education like travel. Our race is by instinct a we should be so during intervals of our lives at least. Most people even succeed better financially away from their childhood home.

Charles Cavill will be notable as the Francisco this autumn. Cavill is an Australian, and it is to be regretted that no American was found to perform from the credit of the performance itself. The distance straight across is only 136 miles, only half the width of the historic Hellespout, which Leander swam to meet Hero and finally went once too often and was drowned. But the currents in the Golden Gate swim make it exceedingly difficult to accomplish. Cavill started out bravely enough, but a quarter of a mile from shore he met the ripple of the outgoing tide. Experienced swimmers agree that it is row Golden Gafe channel was like a mill race. The Australian turned and let it carry him out till he reached a point where he took advantage of a current from the opposite shore. Then he took him one hour and a quarter to do work. the whole distance. Cavill uses the right side stroke.

Cotton Mills In the South,

The year 1896 will be long reme bered as the culminating period of business depression. Not so in the cotton mills of the south, however. While the textile fabric industry in other parts of the Union has had to report idle mills, strikes and reduced wages the business in the southern states has gone steadily onward.

In 1880 there were only 164 cotton mills in the whole south. By 1890 the number had grown to 283. In 1880 the amount of raw cotton consumed by the mills was 87,610,889 pounds. By 1890 the quantity was 278, 256, 109 pounds, showing that the amount of cotton used up had increased comparatively more than the number of mills.

Through all the financial depression lasting from the autumn of 1893 till the present time the cotton spinning industry in the south has gone on growing uninterruptedly. This year there are 852 mills, humming away night and day, some of them, and spinning and weaving 480,543,830 pounds of cotton. North Carolina has the most mills-139. Florida has none.

The ideal situation is realized in the location of these mills, the factories for the consumption of the raw material being on the ground where the raw material is produced. The south had little to lose by hard times in comparison to while she had everything to gain. She is gaining, and that rapidly. Her mill workmen earn money to buy food and pay the farmers who raise that food the cash for it, and that means prosperity race of wanderers, and it is best that all around. Her climate is mild and healthful, her soil fertile. So sure are northern cotton mill owners of the future of the cotton factory in the south that many of them have actually furnished the capital to build the southern mills.

The state of New York is so wealthy that year before last its riches increased more than $100,000,000. Yet this same New York contains nearly one-seventh of all the paupers in the country. He made it his business to go in person to Rome and explain to the feat, but that does not take away the Italian government our immigration laws and regulations, in order that there might not be so many disappointments suffered by Italians coming to this country or so many of them returned to their own land. The Italian authorities thanked the commissioner heartily for his trouble and for the friendship shown Italy by the United States. Stead on the Eastern Question.

It is a satisfaction to see how W. T. Stead roars at England in reference to the Armenian question. In The Review of Reviews he reminds his country that 20 years ago Russia undertook to liberate Bulgaria from Turkish rule and Turkish atrocities. Russia accomplished her work alone. Then England, through her jealousy of Russia, refused to allow that country to enjoy the fruits of victory. In the Berlin congress 20 years ago, at the making of the treaty of San Stefano, "it was England and none other that canceled the clause giving Russia the right to compel the Turks to guarantee the Armenians against outrages and massacre: " At the Berlin congress England's ministers "re-enslaved onethird of Bulgaria, delivered over Armenia to the uncovenanted mercies of the sultan and then ran off with Cyprus as their wages for a crime almost unparalleled in history for its combination of Pharisaism and theft." Such being the fact, Mr. Stead thinks t not surprising that Russia nor any other European nation has any confidence in England now. In brief, the Armenian situation, horrible as it is, is due to England's crime of 20 years ago, when she refused to let Russia force religious liberty for all his subjects down he throat of the sultan.

To make amends for this contemptible conduct in 1878 Stead considers that England should now make redress and crawl out of the consequences of her act the same way she crawled in. Prince Lobanoff said shortly before his death that Russia was powerless to aid the Armenians because "England was committed by the Anglo-Turkish convention to defend the sultan against Russia should she take any action to protect the Armenians against their oppressors. Therefore England herself is responsible for the deplorable situation in Armenia.

To reform it England should, in the judgment of Mr. Stead, first evacuate Apart from the atrocious lies with Cyprus and turn it over to the porte as which some speakers and writers deemed | an earnest that she is not merely playing be a congress of all the powers which should guarantee reforms in Turkey. Third, the carrying out of those reforms should be intrusted to Russia under the superintendence of the powers.

> A notable feature of the Hungarian millennial celebration was the formal opening of the Danube in the portion which has so long obstructed navigation. The Iron Gates of the Danube were a series of rocks that made its channel extremely dangerous for steamers for s distance of five miles in one portion of its length. For six years the Hungarians have been blasting out these rocks. It was an enterprise larger even than clearing East river at Hell Gate. But the work is done, and Emperor Francis Joseph himself formally dedicated the channel, amid the cheers of thousands of his subjects. The Danube is now open from the head of mavigation to the Dardanelles.

Centenarians need not now hesitate to learn to ride the bicycle through fear they are too old. Gladstone will be 87 in December, and Gladstone is to learn to ride the wheel so as to accompany his favorite grandciffld, Dorothy Drew. The sight of the greatest statesman of modern Europe, aged 87, scorching along the road on a bicycle will be not the least of the impressive sights of this strange end of the nineteenth century.
