OLNEY AND THE SENATE.

The strife between Secretary Olney and some of the United States Senators over the Cameron resolution is bringing up an interesting point of constitutional law, and the passionate action of the Senate over the question is not placing that body before the country in a favorable light, as being one that was calm and dispassionate over all important issues.

A careful study of Secretary Olney's position makes it more apparent that he is pretty safe in his position, especially so when the opposing Senators make statements that are easily proven incorrect.

Senator Davis claimed that this Cuban situation was a "new one because never until the Administration of President Cleveland has the foreign policy of the President been antagonistic to the general sentiment in Congress." This incorrect statement is only one of the Senator's which he has made concerning the Cuban matter, for it is a matter of history that the "sentiment" in regard to Louis Napoleon's actions in Mexico in 1863-64 was altogether at variance with President Lincoln's.

The House, unanimously adopted a resolution on this matter declaring that the United States could not recognize a monarchical government erected in America upon the ruins of a republic, yet three days later Secretary Seward in a letter to Minister Dayton at Paris, used the following language:

"The question of recognition of foreign revolutionary or reactionary governments is one exclusively for the Executive, and cannot be determined internationally by Congressional action."

This is a pretty flat footed position in favor of the Executive's position on this matter, his right of the initiative, and Secretary Olney is supported in his conduct by further precedents.

In the matter of Texas, President Jackson seems to have pretty clearly determined that the initiative was his and he would take it.

This controversy of authority is an interesting one, and it will likely be found correct that Secretary Olney's contention that the Cameron resolution is merely an opinion expressed by Congress and that the power to recognize Cuba rests exclusively with President Cleveland, and in this he will be sustained by practice and precedent.

The importance of the whole matter to the people lies in the results. However much the people of this country may desire to see Cuba free, there is no wish for a war on our hands to affect this, and Secretary Olney's firm stand will do much to bring about a careful, dispassionate study of the situation, and action will follow which shall not result to this country's discredit.

The Senate's action in the matter thus far has not added to the credit or dignity of that branch of Congress.

Worse than the Cuckoo.

Stealthily and silently she pines among the thickets, following the trail of the warbler, sparrow or thrush like a sleuth hound. Yonder a tiny yellow bird with a jet black cheek flits hither with a wisp of dry grass in its beak, and disappears in the branches of a small tree close by my studio door.

Like the shadow of fate the cow bird suddenly appears and has doubtless ferreted out her cradle.

In a certain grass bank not far from where I am writing, at the foot of an unsuspecting fern, a song sparrow has built her nest. It lies in the hollow among the dried leaves and grass, and is so artfully merged with its immediate surroundings that even though you know its precise location it eludes you.

Only yesterday the last finishing touches were made upon the nest, and this morning, as I might have anticipated from the excess of lip and the mother bird, I find the first pretty brown spotted egg.

Surely our cow bird has missed this haunt in her rounds. Be not deceived. Within a half hour after was laid the sparrow and its mate, returning from a brief absence to view their prize, discovered two eggs where they had been responsible for but one.

The prowling foe had already discovered their secret; for she, to, is "an attendant on the spring," and had been simply biding her time.

The parent birds once out of sight, she had stolen quietly, upon the nest and after a very brief interval had as slyly retreated, leaving her questionable compliments presumably with a self-satisfied chuckle.

The intruder egg is so like its fellow as to be hardly distinguishable except in its slightly larger size.

It is doubtful whether the sparrow in particular, owing to its similarity, over realizes the deception indeed, the event is possibly considered the cause of self-congratulation, rather than otherwise at least until her eyes are opened by the fateful denouncement of a few weeks later.

And thus the American cow bird outcuckoo the cuckoo as an "attendant on the spring," taking her pick among the nurseries of featherdom now victimizing the oriole by a brief sojourn in the swing hammock in the elm, here stopping a moment to leave her charge to the care of the indigo bird, tomorrow creeping through the grass to the secret nest of the Maryland yellow throat, or Wilson's thrush, or chowink, and, unaccountable as it may appear, here we find the same deadly token safely lodged in the dainty cobweb nest of the vireo, a fragile pendant, hung in the fork of a slender branch, which in itself would hardly appear sufficiently strong to suspend the weight of a cow bird without emptying the nest.—Harper's Magazine.

Paper Matches.

The time-honored scheme of rolling up a piece of paper and using it for a lighter has been utilized by an inventor in the manufacture of matches. The invention promises to revolutionize European match manufacturing, and is perfectly timely, because the wood for this purpose is constantly growing scarcer and more costly. The new matches are considerably cheaper than wooden matches and weigh much less—a fact which counts for much in the exportation. The sticks of these matches consist of paper rolled together on the bias. The paper is rather strong and porous, and when immersed in a solution of wax, stearin and similar substances will easily stick together and burn with a bright, smokeless and odorless flame. Strips one inch in width are first drawn through the combustible mass spoken of above.

A knowledge of economic and political economic questions and their practical bearing upon American conditions is very important to American citizens today than in the scholarship implied in a college degree.

The Republic hangs in the balance, and its permanency and prosperity will depend upon the education and good sense of the people upon these subjects, particularly the questions of Money, Protection and Labor.

To this educational work GUNTON'S MAGAZINE is exclusively devoted.

It is in reality a magazine of American Economics and Political Science. 25 cents a number; $2.50 a year.

We are now sawing oak wood, stave or range lengths, the very nicest kind, and storing it away under large shed houses; keeps dry always in rainy weather, and never gets wet. We keep a large stock of this kind on hand. We cut the prices on sawing, as we are better prepared to do it cheaper than heretofore, and we now deliver it in your wood houses or anywhere you want it, without any trouble to you, only give your orders to BIG HILL, the Shingle Man.

You can also do Big Hill a favor, by reporting to him, if his own carts don't deliver the wood anywhere the customer may want it put. We have polite draymen and nice teams ready to serve, the old citizens of New Berne, if they will only take hold of an enterprise like this, one that has never been offered to New Berne like this before. Respectfully, BIG HILL, The Shingle Man.
