WHAT ARE COMMUNITY INTERESTS?
The fact that every town or city is only a very large family, with everything in common so far as its educational, social and commercial interests are concerned is too often lost sight of in many communities

The citizens of every community should have for their purpose the rebuilding of their city, and in their interest all ought to be united, with no divisions nor dissensions.

Also, it is said, that rivalries in trade in a community are promoter of development and business. They will be, so long as the rivalry does not lead to such cutting of profits, as to destroy the smaller merchant and this with no benefit accruing to the larger merchant.

Taken upon the family idea, a community's interests are too closely mingled to be divided by any person or thing in the same community, whether for good or evil, without affecting in some degree every other person in the same place.

Therefore being so closely united there can be no pulling down of one socially or commercially, without an injury, in some measure, slight or great, to the rest of the community.

How false then the idea that one person may build up at the sacrifice of another, or that an interest in a community may receive some blight and the rest of the interests in the same place be unaffected.

So it can be argued that the promotion of good in a community affects for the better everything in the community.

Community interests therefore are common. The interest of each person is identified with those of all others, and being so identified a mutual self-preservation ought to bind all persons in a community together, and the success of the individual prove the success of every one in the same community.

On the principle of selfishness, alone, there might be a bond of community fellowship, but how much nobler and grander, when a community's interests are developed and advanced through a spirit of local pride and patriotism, when the idea is a leveling up of interests, by which every person receives some help or benefit.

Many such flood the market. Botanical Blood Balm is a conscientiously compounded medicine, the result of forty years' practice by an eminent physician. It is the best blood purifier ever offered to the public, and is guaranteed to cure if given a fair trial. Try it for all skin and blood diseases, including catarrh and rheumatic flux in its worst form. One bottle of it cures more curative and building-up virtue than a dozen any other kind. Price $1.00 per large bottle.

HOW IT STANDS AT HOME.
Our retail demand is such that we buy Botanical Blood Balm (J. R. B.) in large lots. It sells well and gives our customers entire satisfaction. Our sales have increased 50 per cent, within a few months. We attribute this rapid sale to its fine price and merit. We are selling four or five bottles of it to one of any other preparation of the kind. It has sold in no instance to give entire satisfaction.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address:

After Forty Years.
An epitaph as curious in its way as any of the quaint gravestone inscriptions that have been recorded on a tombstone in the cemetery of a suburb of Paris.
The husband died first, and beneath the record of his name was placed, at his request, the line:
'I am anxiously awaiting you. July 30, 1827.'
When his widow died, forty years after, the following line completed her inscription:
'Here I am. September 9, 1867.'

Climate Cure at Home.
Few persons stop to think of the great difference between indoor and outdoor air. In every dwelling a portion of the air has already entered the lungs, and is in the nature of excrement. The outdoor air alone is tolerably pure, but perfectly so only at high altitudes and away from cities.

We talk about climate cure, about going to Florida or Nice for health, but we venture to assert that any invalid may secure a greater improvement with regard to the air he breathes by proper ventilation of his dwelling rooms and by living out of doors most of the time that he can by going to any new climate and neglecting these conditions. Many a poor invalid's salvation might be found in his own garden, while he may go to the ends of the earth in search of health, and die in the closed room to which he has retreated in the fear of outdoor air. —Philadelphia Ledger.

ABGUS OUTPOINTED.
AN INSECT THAT IS CREDITED WITH THIRTY-SIX THOUSAND EYES.
Scientists Have Made Some Wonderful Discoveries In This Line, but They Give the Palm to the Common Dragon Fly—Interesting Natural History.
Thirty-six thousand eyes in one head! This may appear a little like exaggeration, but it is a fact. Science, backed by the microscope, says so, and science never stretches the truth. Should it do so it would cease to be a science. Argus was fabled to have a hundred eyes, but Argus would be a very insignificant curiosity compared with the latest discovery in the insect kingdom. There are numbers of insects with 100 and even 500 eyes, but when the number of optics allotted to a single insect reaches up into the thousands the idea is startling.

Naturalists have recently been engaged in the study of this most interesting subject. Each succeeding day brings more marvelous results until the astounding discovery has been made that the common dragon fly, or mosquito hawk, while seemingly possessed of only two visual organs, really has as many as 36,000, each of the two visible to the ordinary observer being subdivided into 18,000 separate lenses, each eyelet having a distinct nerve connecting it with the brain and acting entirely independently of its myriads of companions.

The theory most generally adopted by scientists is that, while far superior to the eye of higher animals in its range of moving objects, the power of observation of the composite eye is inferior in its application to stationary things. The reason is this: The moving object is first observed by one of the thousands of facets, which perceives it for the infinitesimal part of a second that it takes to get out of the arc of vision of that particular lens and pass into that of another, each movement being separately telegraphed to the brain by the facet on duty. But with a stationary object it is different, since for some reason the minor organs fail to focus accurately, and so render the object less distinct than when viewed by eyes of only one lens each.

A question which continues to puzzle the scientists is whether the animal or insect sees as many images of the objects as he has eyes, or facets. For instance, does the dragon fly fancy he is flitting over 36,000 ponds, or does he see only one? Probably one, for the two eyes of a human being in normal condition show but a single image. Besides, apart from the lenses and cones in front, the eye is a hollow sphere pierced by perforations running down the facets toward the center. It follows that the light impressions thus form a single picture, or mosaic, as it were, each facet presenting a slightly different picture from its neighbor and the group presenting a perfect whole.

There are many other animals possessed of an extraordinary number of eyes. James Francis Stevens, a noted entomologist, is said to have recorded 2,000 such species in his garden in one afternoon, while Francis Pascoe, another noted naturalist, counted 90 different specimens on his library window. The common scorpion, for instance, has many eyes scattered irregularly over its body. The lobster has masses together in each eye more than a hundred distinct eyes, and, unlike human eyes, these are set forward, instead of being sunk inward. Does the poor lobster see things a hundredfold? If so, possibly it is in avoiding the 99 imaginary lobster pots that he stumbles into the real one. The common house fly has 4,000 eyes, the cabbage butterfly 17,000, the dragon fly 8,000, the honeybee 6,300. But still at the head of the list stands the mosquito hawk, or dragon fly, with his 36,000. As his name suggests, while not despising any of the smaller insects, his specialty is the mosquito. Indeed he has succeeded in terrorizing these little pests that his lifeless form still fills them with alarm. In localities where mosquitoes are troublesome an effective mode of ridding the place of them consists in suspending a dead dragon fly from the ceiling by a piece of thread. Those who have tried it say that it has never been known to fail.

Up to a certain point these multitudinous eyes may be compared to windows fitted with innumerable panes of glass. The panes, however, are of different forms. Some, like those of the bee and the ant, are six-sided, reminding us of the pattern so common in Gothic architecture. Some, again, are diamond shaped and others square. Another interesting branch of this interesting subject is the study of the near and far sighted insects. Johanna Muller long ago pointed out that the flight of insects depends upon their power of vision. This will account for the difference in the flights of the common house fly and the wasp. The one confines himself to short flights. As his field is all ways to be found within a small area, he flies in short curves and circles. But the wasp is remarkably sharp sighted, and the arrangement of the lenses shows that his line of vision is decidedly forward. Here, again, the dragon fly is prominent. He has well been called the tyrant of the air. He alone is able to take perfectly straight lines at enormous speed for long distances, evidently seeing well what is ahead of him.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.
