ATRUE SHARK STORY

PATHETIC ACCOUNT OF AN OCEAN MONSTER'S DESTRUCTION.

The Fatal Feud of the Little Blue and Gold Pilot-The Lump of Fat Pork With the Concealed Hook-Death by Torture With the Inevitable Finale.

"How very hard it is to provide for young, fast growing family nowasaid the mother shark, turning, for the hundredth time that morning, upon her broad side in order to get a petter view of what might be stirring above. For nearly a week she had been fasting-in fact, ever since she came in hurriedly at the close of a great feast upon the stripped carcass of a recent whale. There, by dint of the energy of her massive shoulders, her 14 feet of length and fivefold rows of triangular teeth, she had managed to secure a respectable proportion of the spoil for the replenishing of her own huge maw as well as for the up keep of the 14 sharklings that were now restlessly darting in and out of their cozy cave at the far end of her capacious throat.

Within the immediate range of her glance a vast black shadow obscured a wide, irregularly shaped area of the blazing sunshine. It was so calm that the shadow seemed stationary. In the direction of this cool penumbra her gaze no whiskey nor other intexicant, but lingered earnestly, for hereditary instinct as well as long experience gave her the knowledge that from the sub-stance of such shadows came food dropping down, varied and toothsome, actually alive on rare occasions. Some what impatiently she wondered at the long time that her little blue and gold attendant had been gone.

He was so seldom absent from his place between her eyes for a whole minute that she got quite uneasy, but while she fidgeted fretfully, with many twitchings of her flexible "gaff topsail," back came the pilot fish in a tearing-hurry. 'Now, then, partner, move along, do There's a lump of fat pork almost as big as your head hanging over that ship's stern. I don't quite understand why it doesn't sink, but it is good. I nibbled just a crumb, and you can be sure this time that it is no bagful of cinders like that nasty mouthful that gave you the chestache so bad this morning." The latter part of this energetic exordium was lost upon mother shark, being drowned in the wash set up by her great tail fin, which was going in grand style, starting her off at such a rate that two or three stragglers of the family had to skin like shrimps to get indoors before they were left behind and Together they swept into the shadow, where, sure enough, a mass of meat hung just below the sea surface, though gently lifted almost out of water every now and then. "Oh, do look, mamma! There's a big fish. Is be going to cat up that pretty little one, do you think?" "Oh, no, my little man," struck in the mate, "but you watch him now!" As he spoke the great gray body took a curve latterly, a dazzling glare of white appeared, and there beneath the speaker was a cres-centic gap in the smooth, livid underside fringed with innumerable points like chevaux de frise and as big as the gap of a coal sack. Around it the small pilot circled excitedly at top speed. Slowly the mate as gently slacked away, there was a gulp, and the big joint dis appeared. There was a flash, a splash and an eddy. Then the rope attached to the shark hook concealed in the pork grouned over the rail as it felt the strain.

"Lay aft the watch," roared the mate, and amid the trampling of many feet, a babel of directions and a tremendous tumult alongside, through the writhings of the captive monster, she was transferred forward to the lee gangway, where, by the aid of a stout watch "Don't take him aboard," cried the Ar. a m

Almost all Moslems in the upper and middle ranks of life carry in their pockets or bosoms a string of beads for this purpose, which they use not only on the occasion I am describing, but while sitting and smoking their pipes, walking in the streets or even while engaged in conversation. When a Moslem has gone over his beads at the regular time of prayer, he folds his hands, and then, holding them up open, as if to receive something from above, he prays for such blessings as he desires for himself or his household. When this is concluded, he strokes his beard with his right hand and says, "Praise be to God!" This concludes
