Signee as an Artist.

One day in the spring of 1875, when the Daily Graphic of New York was in the full swing of its meteoric career, a modest looking young man called at the art department of the paper, at its Park place offices, with a package of sketches, says the Philadelphia Times. The drawings were left for inspection, and the artist, handing his address in Brooklyn to the assistant of the art editor, took his departure. The availability of the work was manifest as soon as the package was opened, and a comic series from the lot was reproduced at once for the front page. Their appearance made quite a flutter in the cockpit of the art staff, for talent capable of furnishing good comics in pen and ink in those days was scarce and costly article. The page was signed "S." and that was all the staff knew about it until there was a general shoving about of work desks to make room "for Mr. Sigbee." But Mr. Sigbee did not materialize, nor did the supply of his wonderfully funny drawings continue.

It became known that the art editor had duly notified Mr. Sigbee that his sketches were accepted and that he would be given a place upon the art staff at once. Would Mr. Sigbee please be on hand on Monday morning? But the week rolled by and there was no Mr. Sigbee. The art editor was unspeakably astonished. He then wrote still more urgently to the boy, but the desirable artist, and this time he got an answer: "Lieutenant Commander Charles D. Sigbee, U. S. N., sends his compliments and begs to say that as he is at present in command of a government ship he cannot accept the position so kindly offered."

Japanese Love of the Beautiful.

In the principal room of every Japanese house built by rule there is a slightly raised platform sometimes so arranged that it can be entirely enclosed. This is the "sacred niche" where the mikado would sit should he ever enter the house. It is still the rule there that the subject must not look down upon the mikado. In the days, not very long past, when it was unlawful even to look upon his face, he would have sat entirely shut off from view, and his foot would have been served through a side opening so placed as to prevent a sight of his sacred countenance. The royal inclosure is locked upon as an altar. With it the whole house must be in keeping, and it is here that some grouping of flowers or leaves, some beautiful work of art, is always to be seen. The spot is itself a sample of excellent work, and here the little children learn from infancy to reverence and love the beautiful and the good in nature and in art.

The love of the beautiful seems, in deed, to be inherent in the Japanese race. Pictures on the wall are changed every month, according to the season of the year. Clusters of favorite flowers are gracefully disposed around the house in huge pots or vases and are a source of pleasure to young and old. In the open space at the rear of the house, no matter how small, a garden is made in which a tiny landscape is skillfully planned.—Ida Tigue Hodnett in St. Nicholas.

A Lesson In Business.

Blumper failed once and lost his last dollar. He studied the thing over from every view and concluded that his fatal mistake was in not advertising. He was a general favorite in the country town where he met with disaster, he held nothing out against his creditors, and his reward came in the shape of the postmaster's office. The income depended very largely on the number and value of stamps sold. Blumper determined that he would not fail again, at least from the same cause.

In the local paper there appeared a big display advertisement notifying the public that Blumper had the largest, brightest, newest and best selected stock of postage stamps in the county. He would sell them at the lowest figure, warrant them to be all that was represented, would sell them in quantities to suit the purchasers, guaranteed that they would carry a letter as far and as safely as any other stamps in the world, defied competition and wound up by saying that he had the backing of the government. As long as it was good he was good.

"It beat the band," tells an old citizen. "We laughed at him and knew that he was the first postmaster that ever adopted such tactics, but he was a winner. It tickled the people almost to death, and there is no better way of getting their favor. They sent from 100 miles in every direction to buy stamps of him. Not a man came to town to do business or make a visit that did not have a commission to buy postage stamps of Blumper. He made a nice thing, is now in private business again and thinks an advertisement about as good as ready money."—Detroit Free Press.

Not Their Exact Words.

The general tendency to look at the actions of others through one's own particular spectacles is frequently observed. Perhaps not so often noticed, however, is the habit of unconsciously rendering another's speech into one's own language.

A Boston girl who had been taking her first lesson in bicycle riding expressed her satisfaction at home at the result of her experiment.

"I had made most satisfactory progress for a novice."

"Why, did he really say that?" was the surprised query.

"Well, no," answered the Boston young woman, after a moment's reflection. "What he did say was, 'You'll do fast rate for a new beginner.'"

A friend of the poet Bryant chanced to be alone in his study when a cabinet maker brought home a chair that had been altered. When Mr. Bryant returned, he asked:

"Miss Robbins, what did the fellow say about my chair?"

"He said," answered the visitor, "that the equilibrium is now admirably adjusted."

"What a fine fellow!" said Mr. Bryant, laughing. "I never heard him talk like that. Were those his exact words?"

"Well, he said, 'It joggles just right,'" repeated Miss Robbins.—Youth's Companion.

Story of a Boston "Tip."

In a fashionable restaurant the other evening a lady and gentleman were dining before going to an up town theater. They had been belated in arriving, and their order was consequently small and hastily consumed. Handing the waiter a $5 bill for the check, he was requested to hurry, but as he did not return with the $2 change, nor could he be seen anywhere in the room, the gentleman beckoned to another waiter and told him to look up the other. After a still longer delay, the first waiter, looking glum enough, reappeared on the scene.

"Where is my change?" said the gentleman. "You told me to keep the change," returned the waiter, with a surly air. Here the lady took a hand.

"You're mistaken," she said. "It is not likely that the fee should be $2 when you leave us to put on our own wraps." So the fellow drew the $2 from his pocket, and the gentleman, not wishing to make further trouble, gave him the customary quarter and departed.

Every one knows the course that should have been pursued, but with not two seconds to spare people cannot stop to make complaints at headquarters, and this the wily waiter understood quite well.—Boston Herald.

Wanted a Good One.

Speaking of antiquity brings up the inextinguishable American fad of using coats of arms. It reached a climax not long ago, when a youthful daughter of a wealthy German brewer visited an engraver's office, and looking over the books on heraldry, finally ordered one coat of arms for her own use which combined the prettiest features of those belonging to three great English houses. Her youngest sister, not to be outdone, ordered one for her notebook and books which contained devices from five old English houses, not one of which coincided with the other's choices. The amazed engraver endeavored to expostulate, but neither of the young women would listen to his argument. "They liked the coats of arms," they said. "Anybody could buy them who wanted to, and they didn't propose to allow any ridiculous nonsense to prevent them having what pleased them. Besides that, they wanted them different anyhow, so that they wouldn't get mixed up."—New York Mail and Express.

A neat idea.

The inkeepers in the countries on the Rhine follow a practice which is worth hinting to persons of the same profession in this country. They give their guests a carte, or piece of paper measuring about 16 inches long and 4 inches broad and which folds together like a small map. This carte, when folded, exhibits on the outside a view of the hotel, also its name, and the name of the keeper; on expanding it we find that the other parts consist of lists of the principal curiosities or public buildings which are worth visiting in the town and its environs, and along the chief routes from the place. Thus the German hotel keeper's carte is a card of his house and a local guide, all in one bit of paper, the expense of which cannot be much greater than that of a common bill of fare.—New York Ledger.

Paris Exposition.

Men of genius are flooding the directors of the Exposition to be held in Paris in 1900 with brilliant ideas. One inventor urges the dropping of a gigantic glass egg from the top of the Eiffel tower into a pond below, several persons to have the privilege of occupying the egg, in order to experience falling from a high point into space. Another suggests the construction of a Colossus like that of Rhodes, whose interior shall show visitors the arrangement and position of all the organs of the human body and shall have room enough besides to accommodate a medical congress.

The Appeal to Reason, a Populist paper printed in Girard, Kan., refers to the American flag as "a painted rag on a stick," and says that it is "ridiculous, criminal and debasing to teach little children to bow down to it." He has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for twelve years; has sold hundreds of bottles of this remedy and nearly all other cough medicines manufactured, which shows conclusively that Chamberlain's is the most satisfactory to the people, and is the best. Shark Charmer.

In the Persian gulf the divers have a curious way of opening the season. They depend implicitly upon the shark conjurers and will not descend without their presence. To meet this difficulty the government is obliged to hire the conjurers to divert the attention of the sharks from the fleet. As the season approaches vast numbers of natives gather along the shore and erect tents and tents and bazaars. At the opportune moment—usually at midnight, so as to reach the oyster banks at sunrise—the fleet, to the number of 80 or 100 boats, carries out to sea. Each of these boats carries two divers, a steersman and a shark charmer and is manned by eight or ten rowers. Other conjurers remain on shore, twisting their bodies and moulding incantations to divert the sharks. In case a man enters is perverse enough to disregard the charm and attack a diver an alarm is given, and no other diver will descend on that day. The power of the conjurer is believed to be hereditary, and the efficacy of his incantations to be wholly independent of his religious faith.—Frank H. Sweet on "Pearl Seeking," in Lippincott's.

Two Bad Boys.

Years ago a Michigan farmer found two boys in his melon patch, and he locked them both in his granary. The frightened boys huddled close together in the lightest corner of the prison, and after their first fears were over began to talk.

"Billy," said one, "did you ever hear of a congressman?"

"Yes, Charley," said the other. "The fellow that made the speech down to the schoolhouse the other night, with the silk hat, he was a congressman."

"Well, they're only one thing you can arrest a congressman for."

"Not for stealin' melons?"

"No, you bet not."

"Let's be congressmen, Charley."

"All right."

After they grew to manhood, one of the boys moved to Duluth, Minn., and the other staid in Grand Rapids. Election night in November, 1891, this message was sent from Grand Rapids:

Charles A. Towne, Duluth, Minn.: I'm there with 5,000 to spare.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH.
CHARLES A. TOWNE.

In reply came the following from Duluth:

William Alden Smith, Grand Rapids, Mich.: I see your 5,000, William, and go you five by ten.

Domino's Ball.

It was not a success, Domino's ball. The men were right enough, and there were plenty of them, but the dear girls! Such painful types of beauty, and all so very mature. And there they sat, waiting in vain for partners—Helens of Troy and Joans of Aro and Rosamonds that were not a bit fair—all antique subjects, you will perceive, back numbers of fiction out of date.

So the men kept near the buffet, and one said to another:

"I did not know that our host was so devoted to horticulture."

"Do you refer," said the other, "to the cabbage he presents us for cigars?"

"No," smiled back the first. "I was thinking rather of his ardent passion for collecting wallflowers."

And their glances wandered vaguely to the ballroom.—Pink Me Up.

Abyssinian Legal Pomp.

The lord chief justice of Abyssinia was a chiseled old gentleman, dressed in a huge black hat, green silk handkerchief tied round his head underneath the hat, black silk cloak embroidered with gold, smart purple silk shirt underneath and continuations of the fairest linen. May be worth more to you than $100 if you have a child who soils bedding from incontinence of water during sleep. Cures old and young alike. It arrests the trouble at once, $1. Sold by C. D. Bradham, druggist, New Berne, N. C.

A Fashionable Eresch.

Miniature of court beauties, painted on ivory and mounted in a thin band of gold, are the brooches of the hour.

In 1888 my wife went East and was attacked with rheumatism. She received no relief until she tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Since that time we have never been without it. We find it gives instant relief in cases of burns and scalds and is never failing for all rheumatic and neuralgic pains.—D. C. BRANT, Santa Ynez, Cal. For sale by F. S. DUFFY.

France is Cooling.

The gradual cooling of France is proven by its vegetation. The Italian poplar, common in early French settlements, is now seldom seen in the country, while the lemon and orange are disappearing fast.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure, 25c. The genuine has L. R. Q. on each tablet.
