OUR EUROPEAN ADVISERS.

The United States being a young nation, and having no standing army, or navy of consequence, and never having been engaged in war except in two with England and one with Mexico, in additional to a little locil war of four years duration, it is quite natural that the European nations who have the war experiences, and armies and navies, should be free critics and advisers of this country before and since the present war with Spain began.

Of course it is presumptuous for this country to have ignored these same foreign nations, and gone ahead and fought Spain, with its own notion of how the fighting ought to be done.

Admiral Dewey made a military blunder in passing into Manila bay, according to these critics, but some how he is still there, and likely to stay until this government requests his leaving to the "jumping off place" the departure.

Then there was the danger of the entire Atlantic suscoast being at the terror into nymphs or any other unwelmercy of the Spanish war vessels, which were larger, faster and better manned than the American vessels, for war was unknown to the American, for however capable a money maker he might be, his naval experience could of course not compare give nature some sort of a green start, with that of the Spanish, whole nobility officered its navy.
