POLLOCK STREET.

Died at his residence in the city of Newbern, at mid-day on November 26, in the 66th year of his age, Daniel T. ing been Commissary of Gen. Branch's hat time that tried men's souls. He was participant in the famous battle of drum, cannon and rifle that first came to he homes of our people. After this plendid brigade received its first bapism of blood by the waters of the Neuse role squadrons of the long struggle, very where facing danger and death with nvincible courage. Major Carraway witnessed the changing scenes of the terible conflict, when his brigade shared the ordeal, and he treasured the memories of that glorious and patriotic life up After the close of the war he returned he experience of a methodical, practical mind to whatever engaged his thoughts. Our impression of him was, that he never was ambitious of building up any serticular work, but whatever his hand and to do therein to move quietly without friction or display. He was a loyal and useful communicant of Christ Church, Newbern, after filling prominent stations among its leading laymen, its prosperity and influence lying very close ot trained in literary methods and rules, he had a clear, strong intellect, and furished many interesting articles, on a large variety of subjects, to the leading fournals of the country. And we are ound to say, that he wrote sensibly and well. His accounts of his travels, of the men and women that he saw, of the places that he visited, and the faces that impressed his intelligent spirit of in quiry, were distinctly a valuable contrioution to newspaper literature. As he grew older, his manner became graver, and a look of sadness blent with the appearance of introspection seem al to change the outward individuality of the man Loving to be with his children, cordially respectful to his neighbors and friends, and honoring every institution and foot of the country that gave him birth, like all veterans of the civil war, and especially those who have lost precious ties, his thoughts were evidently much in the past. After all, without being at all aged, he has fallen at his post. But to his family and friends it will be a pleasant remem brance, that he fell like one of Christ's warriors on the tented field. Without excess of emotion, without any dramatic preparation of soul, he has silently fallen on sleep. But his vacant place at Christ Church, and his absence from his home will witness to his faithful attachment to the highest and noblest interests of
