CONDITIONS PAVOR DEVELOP

The advanced prices of building mat ? ial may provoke the excuse that the time for the promotion and development of local enterprises is unfavorable.

No doubt it is bester for builders to get their materials at low figures than to have to pay high prices, but how much development would there ever be if enterprises and industries had to wait for dull periods, with low prices for everything?

Market values are booming, therefore better walt for a dull season to build warehouses and cotton mills, when prices of materials get down, is an excuse offered by some persons for not taking stock in local enterprises.

Wait until things look better, until, business picks up, then we will take stock and put in money to assist local development, is the voice of these same persons when prices for all kinds of goods are down.

How shall a town develop halting between these two kinds of advice?

It simply will never build up nor go ahead, but will remain dead and nonprogressive, waiting and waiting for what its citizens think a more favorable season, which never comes.

The premotion and development of local enterprices are not to be started except when the business conditions leek favorable.

The cost of an industrial enterprise is not based alone upon present prices, but upon what returns the enterprise will pay upon its cost, and this can easily be determined.

Conditions today are favorable for local development and the future fa

He Was Clean.

The advantage of a trained nurse is that she knows not only what to do, but what not to do, since unnecessary attentions merely exhaust the patient. The point is illustrated by the following stary from an old Cape newspaper of the time of the Zulu war, when kindly but uninstructed ladies rushed off in emburrassing numbers to give their services at the military hospitals. "What can I do for you, my poor follow?" asked one of the gentle nurses of a sufferer. of a sufferer.

AN EXCITING CHASE.

A GANGE RADE IN WHICH A HE LIFE WAS THE STAKE

Barly use Sunday morning, as the missionary and his wife were preparing for the duttes of the day, they seemd a shout from the lake. An old man was seen seated in a cance, which a number of stalwart fellows were paddling as fast as they could toward the little river that carries the waters of the lake to the Kongo, a few miles morth. The old man was creting in a of the lake to the Kengo, a few miles north. The old man was crying in a frantic and deepairing voice:

"Mpebe us Monkasa."

These were the names by which the missionary and his wife are known to the natives. The old fellow called them again and again, till be saw the white man and his wife standing on the beach. Then he shouted to them:

"Oh, come and save me! They are taking me away to kill and eat me!"

The missionary undergrood the altimater.

The missionary understood the situa-on at once. The place is not more than a day's travel from the mouth of the great Mobangi tributary of the Kongo. The banks of the Mobangi are lined with cannibal tribes, and it is one of the greatest botbeds of cannibalcanoes sent out from these tribes to the districts a little south of the Kongo for steal men to carry away to their homes for their cannibal feasts. Here was an old friend of the missionaries who had fallen into the power of these savage foragers. Not a moment was to be lost, for the cance was shooting past the station and rapidly approaching

At a word from the white man a baif dozen young blacks launched a cance in the lake and piled their paddies with all their might. It was an exciting chase. The canulhals, seeing they were pursued, redoubled their en-ergies to reach the river a few miles north of them. It was a boat race in dead cornest, and the stake was buman life.

There were six of the pursuers and only four of the fugutive canoemen. The chasing party had a larger sum total of muscle, and this advantage began to tell. Slowly the missionary boat gained on the cannibals, who saw at last that they would certainly be caught before they reached the river.
Then they paddled like mad for the abore, and the pursuers were only a few boat lengths from them as they ran their cause up on the beach.

The cannibuls jumped out and three of them made their escape into the woods, carrying with them a considerable quantity of brass wire, the form able quantity of bram wire, the form of money they use in buying slaves. The fourth man was made a prisoner and was taken back to the missionary settlement with the poor old captive, who was now trembling with joy as a few moments before he had quaked with fear. The missionary says that if he had not called for help he would probably have been killed before night. The expected then happened. Of course, the savages did not relish the idea of returning to their people without any victim and with one of their party missing. The white man felt cerappeared within bailing distance.

They had brass wire, they show and how much did the white man want in exchange for their friend.

He wanted all they had, and after He wanted all they had, and after considerable parleying a lot of wire was brought half way to the station. The old man said be was sure this wire was all his captors had in the cance, and finally it was accepted and the prisoner released. The men probably made their way as best they could back to their tribe.

The wire was worth only $4, but the missionary says this was enough to keep the old man in food for over nine months, and the fair inference is that the cost of living on the upper Kongo has been reduced to a bedrock basis.

The Kongo sinte is rigorously suppressing cannibalism as far as its influence extends, and therefore the natives who indulge in the practice no longer dare. In accordance with their former custom, to send large expeditions out to buy slaves. Now and theo, however, a small party sugage in the hasardons business, hoping by the annilhous of their numbers to escape the attention of the whites.—New York Sun.
