ARE NATIONAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS NECESSARY.

As this country becomes more peliti cally "progressive," there seems to be less need for the voter to be a man having political views, political principles, or a personage to be at all considered before the day of election.

Of course the voter is besieged from the stump, from the rear of a railroad train, and has countless newspapers flung at him, all of these influences flattering him by telling him of his individual importance.

principles, when his party is apt to spring some new scheme, which as a "good party man" he must awallow. without even debating whether the des is something in agreement with what is already in his political stomach, or whether the latest political nostrum will preduce nauses, and make the victim a blind, unbeeding voter who will deposit a ballot on election day, indifferent to what it may be, or for whom it may be cast.

Thus it is, while the voter is lauded as being "free," he actually amounts to very little, except as he may be veted to further the political avarice of the office seeker.

Of what actual significance, as express ing any real opinion of the yeter, is a National Convention, held for the purpose of nominating President and Vice President?

The delegates there seated may be largely "selected" for a purpose, or else are of such an "impressionable" character that they may be stampeded by a speech, or change so as to be with the

Take the National Presidential co ventions to be held next year.

Where is the voter's voice in them, for already both of the great political parties have practically named their Presidents, through the politicians, with the probabilities that the second places will be filled before the conventions are held.

Why should the voter be any longer sluded by talk on his "political freedom?" Why should the newspapers be keep her health. If she is weak, sickly filled with columns of the "wonderful and all run down, she will be nervous public enthusiasm" over this or that traveling political gymnast who does his special contertion act to suit each growd of hearnes?

But as long as the veter dalights in being humbugged, so long will he be deceived into thinking himself "free," and the willy politician will make the nominations and lead the voter to the polls, bereft of his principles and indi-vidualism, a mockery and sham so far as political freedom is concerned.

During the winter of 1887 Mr. James Reed, one of the leading citizens and merchants of Clay, Clay Co., W. Va., struck his leg against a cake of ice in such a manner as to bruise it severely. It became very much swollen and pained him so badly that he could not walk without the aid of crutches. He was treated by physicans, also used several kinds of liniment and two and a half gallons of whisky in bathing it, but nothing gave any relief until he began using Chamberlain's Pain Balm. This brought almost a complete cure in a week's time and he believes that had he not used this remedy his leg would have had to be amputated. At the appointed time Hearn mounted the steeple climber's shoulders, and the diary loarney began. Tens of thousands of people watched the foolhardy pair. At last the cross was reached, and Hearn left his perch on the climber's shoulders. The mob in the streets below cheered, and then the two men returned to the ground safely.

Hearn went back to the office and ant down and wrote two columns of a story describing his semantions, and the glories of the view he had obtained from the steeple top. Such a glowing description of a city seen from a great height has never been read before or since. When the first star appears in the seavens the first bud of the sorrowful ree opens, and as the shades of night dvance and the stars thickly stud the sky the buds continue gradually open-ing until the whole tree looks like one ing until the whole tree looks like one immense white flower. On the approach of dawn, when the brilliancy of the stars gradually fades in the light of day, the sorrowful tree closes its flowers, and ere the sun is fully risen not single blossom is visible. A sheet of flower dust as white as snow covers the ground around the foot of the tree, which seems blighted and withered dur-ing the day, while, however, it is actively preparing for the next nocturnal festival. The fragrance of the blossoms is like that of the evening primrose.

If the tree is ent down close to the roots, a new plant shoots up and attains maturity in an incredibly short time. In the vicinity of this singular tree there usually grows another, which is almost an exact counterpart of the sor rowful tree, but less beautiful, and strange to say, it blooms only in the daytime.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A Bride With Some Good Points Some years ago in an agricultural district there lived a farmer who wanted to sell one of his cows. There was not at that time a weekly paper in which he could advertise, so he resolved to follow a local custom and ask the vicar of the parish when giving out his notices at church to advertise the cow. "Yes, farmer," said the vicar, "I should be willing to oblige you, but you don't attend my church."

Presently, however, they struck a bargain that the vicar should advertise the cow, and the man in return promised to go to church.

Now, unfortunately the man was of, and on the Sunday following when the vicar gave out the banns of mar-riago between Joseph So-and-so, bach-elor, and Sarah So-and-so, spinster, the farmer took it for granted that the vicar was giving out particulars of his
