dured the manifold bratalities of their officers. Brave to a superlative degree as these men were, with that flery courage which welcomes battle and death, they cannot compare in quality with the officers and men who now take our ships to sea. Everywhere except in the highest ranks, where our captains and admirals are too old, the change has been one wholly for the good. Yet it has not kept pace with the times, and today our sailors are poorly paid and not too well fed.—Nineteenth Century.

At a very early period the orientals were familiar with a kind of pastry, a mixture of flour, oil and honey, and for centuries pastry making went bo further, evan among the nations in the south of Europe. But in the beginning of the middle ages a change began to take place in the method of mixing the ingredients, and some other substances were brought into use. Butter, eggs and salt found their way into pastry improvement. Paste next came to be used as an inclosure for meat, seasoned used as an inclosure for meat, seasoned with spices, etc. Afterward it went a step further, the next use being for the inclosure of creams, fruit, preserves, etc., and later still it began to take the many funciful shapes in which it has since been commonly found. In the early stages of English cookery the pastry casca were called coffins or "coffynes" and were made in various sizes from "gret coffynes with lowe sizes from "gret coffynes with lowe liddes" for the "tartes of flesche" to the "smalle coffynes" for "tarfolettes" of "fische or filesche," mixed with "staf of boylled figges ground and good powdure and spices."

Petruchio in "The Taming of the Shrew," it may here be noted, calls a little cap. "a custard coffin." These coffins correspond with the "vol-ar-vent" of today.—Gentleman's Maga-

The Cuitas of the Adjective.

Everyhody nowadays in prose or poetry claps on an adjective to every noun. It degrades the adjective and enervates the noun. Then, too, there is a host of velgar overdressed people introduced into our company, whom we, the old fashloned adjectives, hardly recognize—"strenuous," "intense," "weird," "fiery," "sympathetic," "splendid," "secure," "maive," "impressive," "poignant"— mostly attached, too, to the wrong nouns. There are too many adjectives, and they carry too much sall, like dailin, "bedeeked, ornate and gay." I noticed, as an instance the other way, a crificiam in a French review the other day of the academician sea captain who calls himself Pierre Loti, whose style is so defected (I believe that is the term invent-The Cultus of the Adjective. self Pierre Loti, whose style is so det-cated (I believe that is the term invent-od by the Postlethwayte school—you re-member Postlethwayte?) that he seldom or never ness an adjective more star-ting than "good," "bad," "green," "ted," "dark," "light," and so on, and yet so orders his sentence that the adjective shines out like a rose on a brier bush.—Longman's Magasine.

This term was first used by a minister of state who affected to ridicule the warnings of those who were constantly drawing the attention of the two houses of parliament to Bussia's steady advance toward India. The term was a happy one in its way, but time ere long proved that the alarmists were correct, and the said minister, so far as I remember, deprecated its being constantly bringht up against him.

This word was coined by the Duke of Argyll, who, in a speech in the house of lords, was deriding the well founded apprehensions of those who feared that the Russians would make themselves maters of Merv, in Torkistan. They took it in 1882-4.—Notes and Queries.
