reads like an apology and an explanation.

General Warren holds the 'ridges, but the enemy's politions are higher. The British artillery is playing on the Boer positions, and the Boers are replying. The British infantry is separated by only 1,400 yards from the enemy, but an approach to the steep slopes, acress the bare open, would expose the British to a fatal rifle fire.

General Buller's plans have reached the development. He declines to send his infantry across this zone against for midable positions by daylight, and discless a lis purpose to assault the Spion Kop heights during the night. This appears to be the key to the Boer defences. If he takes it and thus commands the adjacent country as important and porsibled.
