A SENATORSHIP REGARDLESS OF COST. The trial of William A. Clark, of Montana, upon the grounds of employing bribery to secure his election to the United States Senate, is a noteworthy case of how much money may be spent by a candidate, and with what a total disregard of the amount spent a man may have, who wants an office.

To the average office seeker, a few hundred dollars spont to secure an election seems a large sum, while Senator Clark, testifying in his own defence, coolly acknowledges having spent $115,-000, while outsiders say $500,000 is nearer the true amount spent by the Senator. Having acknowledged spending this sum, Mr. Clark also testifies that no bribery was used in getting his senalor-

However profitable it may be for a political party having such a rich candidate on its ticket, and however desirable such a millionaire as Senator Clark must be to those who follow politics, "professionally," there is a danger side to having such men run for office.

An office seeker who spends one, two or ten times the amount which he will receive for services, if elected to an office, cannot escape suspicion of seeking office, for the purpose of using his posttion in some way by which he can re-imburse himself for the money spent in and all throat and lung diseases. There is an over ready crowd of rich men, who will attempt office getting by the expenditure of money, if there is the speculative chance of winning the position.

The "making good" of campaign expenses can easily be determined afterwards, and no one can doubt the success of it.
