How The Impeachment Scene Looks.

The Judges, Counsel and Spectators. Opinions on the Trial and its Outcome. Outside Interest Commentaries.

Special to Journal.
RALEIGH, March 19.—The most interesting stage of the impeachment trial arrived yesterday afternoon and this morning, the presence of Chief Justice Furches on the stand giving his side of the case and his recollections of the mandamus proceedings.

The Senate Chamber is arranged like a fashionable afternoon tea, the curtains are closely drawn and the gas is lighted and some bright hanging that shut off the entrance are the decorations. Inside the semi-circle of Senators are the two Judges and Counsel on one side, and opposite them the House managers and their Counsel. The counsel for the Judges are quiet and deliberate, the monumental Jarvis is motionless. Osborne sits sideways on his chair and looks at the gallery or at nothing while Long asks questions. The prosecution is more alert and its members laugh and whisper a good deal. Rountree does not sit still for a moment but is calling the attention of the others to any points he thinks should be noticed. Locke Craig looks sinister and dark, while Judge Allen seems to be most dignified of the prosecutors.

The gallery is filled with spectators, three quarters of which are ladies. A dozen or two of negroes are on one side of the gallery, and in the same seats are the white people. On the floor all the back spaces are filled with chairs and many ladies are here too. Many are the wives of Senators and Counsel, but many are younger and come in and go out like they were out shopping. They seem out of place and could be spared.

The trial is telling severely on Judge Furches. His friends say that he looks years older. He takes the affair very much to heart and has been confined to his bed at several times. The partisan no doubt will rejoice over his worry but the average citizen feels a pity at seeing a Chief Justice of North Carolina on the witness stand, being baited by Craig and Rountree. Judge Furches speaks almost too elaborately, he seems too anxious to tell what he knows and is very verbose. Only when asked his motives, his voice grew loud when he declared that he "had only striven to do his duty as a Judge" and that "not in these cases or in any others had he been guided by his political affiliations with his party."

Judge Furches attempted to draw the distinction between the personal advice he had offered and a decision of the Supreme Court, that the matter of Shellfish Commissioner White could not come before the court, a mild sensation was created when he quoted Judge Montgomery's remarks to Judge Clark that he (Clark) had been filing too many political opinions, and it must stop.

Judge Douglas is a less important witness than the Chief Justice. His son assists the counsel and stands by the "old man." Judge Douglas is short in stature and both he and his father bear an undoubted resemblance to the great Democrat Stephen A. Douglas, the "little giant" of Illinois. Judge Douglas in figure bears a strong resemblance to his great father, or at least to the bronze statue of Douglas that stands on the lofty monument at Chicago, looking out over Lake Michigan. The natural inclination of Judge Douglas to be guided by the fame of his father, was made a point of by Judge Byrum in his opening speech for the defense.

There are of course all sorts of opinions on the trial and its outcome, that is among Democrats. It varies from the extreme of one who has, "I hope the party will be damned if the Judges are convicted," to the partisan who wants "to see the Judges roasted." Between the extremes is the great body of the party, with the majority unfavorable to the proceedings. Such at least is the statement of men who ought to know, men who have borne the heat and burden of the day in times that are past.

The length of the trial is still uncertain but the opinion is that it will be over by the end of the week. There is no undercurrent of information yet as to the outcome but such a feeling is likely to develop before the end of the week. It will be in the air. The outside public is beginning to take an interest in the trial, the New York papers have ordered long special's sent daily by wire and comment will be "red hot" before the conclusion of the whole matter.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

Examinations of Judges Furches and Douglas, Day Favorable for Defense.

Special to Journal.
RALEIGH, March 19.—The cross examination of Judge Furches closed before noon, today.

Four neighbors of the Judge's then testified, and although all were Democrats, they gave high praise of his integrity. Judge Douglas then took the stand, and his examination and cross examination took the rest of the day, but concluded before the adjournment at six o'clock.

The general opinion tonight, especially among lawyers, is that the day's trial was favorable for the defense, and that Judge Douglas stood the ordeal excellently well under the searching questions of C. B. Watson, for the prosecution.

Some liveliness ensued towards the close of the day's session, due to the remark to Governor Jarvis, on introduction of evidence.

RALEIGH.

Senators Studying Law. Experts Arriving. Cotton Mill Charters. State Swamp Lands.

RALEIGH, March 19.—The Senators are devoting their evenings to study of the law, and most of them are to be found in the Supreme Court library during this impeachment trial. They have a double duty to perform—as jurors, to find the facts, as judges to determine the law.

Some more of the able lawyers and experts summoned to give evidence for the defence as "experts" are here. Among those who came today is W. M. Robbins, ex-Congressman and a member of the Gettysburg commission and W. W. Clark, of New Bern.

The Governor has under the new act for the government of the soldiers' homes appointed Julian S. Carr, A. B. Stronach and State Auditor B. F. Dixon directors on the part of the State. The Soldiers' home association is entitled to elect 2 directors. It is called to meet here on the 27th, instant to select those.

The State charters two new cotton mills, the Elizabethtown, at Charlotte, capital $100,000, and the Chronicle, at Belmont, Gaston county, capital $75,000, with leave to increase to $125,000.

State Geologist Holmes and assistant Myers are here aiding the State superintendent of public instruction in ascertaining the exact amount of the State swamp lands. These lands lie in about a score of counties. The lands in Hyde are being looked into. There is a suggestion that probably the pest industry may be developed there on a large scale.

It is now expected that W. H. Martin, the detailing ex-clerk of the State treasury, may be tried next week.

The ladies are exhibiting an extraordinary amount of interest in the impeachment trial. A lawyer says they are taking sides in the case, just as the male spectators do.

Lindsay E. Lancaster of Raleigh is appointed State keeper of weights and measures.

When you are bilious, use these famous little pills known as DeWitt's Little Early Risers to cleanse the liver and bowels. They never gripe. F. S. Duffy & Co.

Knee Breeches For Apollo.
Ada, O., March 17.—The Literary Society of the college has recently purchased an Apollo. Helvidius in New York to adorn the hall. When the statue was unpacked its startling nudity caused the young ladies on the committee to scream and run from the room. I was decided the statue must be returned or draped. The men clothed the statue in red velvet knee breeches and thus alluded, Apollo now receives callers.

Deal is 21,000,000 Acres.
St. Paul, March 17.—The sale of 21,000,000 acres of land by the North Pacific Railroad lying west of the Missouri River for $40,000,000 is reported to have been consummated. President Mellon, of the North Pacific, left St. Paul's night to close, it is said, the negotiations.

The purchasers of this land are said to be Eastern capitalists who have perfected a syndicate, and who will undertake to encourage its settlement and cultivation by eastern farmers, such as are heading westward in the home-sucker's movements each week.

The lingering cough following grippe calls for One Minute Cough Cure. For all throat and lung troubles this is the only harmless remedy that gives immediate relief. Prevents consumption. F. S. Duffy & Co.
