THE NEW NORTH CAROLINA REPUBLICANISM.

With the passing of the negro as political factor in North Carolina, by the act of the Constitutional Amendment there came the promise of a new order of Republicanism.

The elimination of the negro from State politics, was not the only element which made State Republicanism obnoxious and repulsive to an outsider.

There remained, and still remains the office holding white politicians, who regard every political office as a birth right. with themselves specially named as inheritors of the easy and good paying

Even with the negro removed, there is the ever ubiquitous J. C.L. Harris, or the ponderous D. L. Russell, the first with his numerous suggestions, and the second with his offensive mannerisms, each laying claim to a leadership that can have no new following in North Carolina, today.

Naturally the opponents of the movement to any Republican reform in North Carolina, conceding the elimination of the negro from politics, lay strong stress upon a party which throws away the negro and still clings to Russell and Harris, and their criticism has just force.

So far as the dissatisfied voter is concerned, or the voter who may be seeking a party whose principles, be they of business or sentimental, are more to his personal interests and liking, such a voter cannot find companionship with those political interests, so-called Republican, as are represted by Harris and Russell and others of that ilk.

The sneer against office giving as means to party creation and party building up, is ever the fling of the opposing party, and yet every political party organization is maintained by party promises and the gift of offices.

If the Republicanism for North Caroranization, it is not necessarily to its discredit that its new leadership shall be newly appointed office-holders.

Without a beginning of this kind there can be no new Republicanism, for no voter will accept the Harris and Russell crowd leadership, for it is fully as offensive today, as it has been at any time in

MISSING AMERICAN TYPES

Lady Helan Forces has centributed an article on "The American in England" to the London Rambier, Herbert Vivian's eccentric continuation of Dr. Johnson's famous sheet Lady Helan is one of the Misses Moucreffes, who held a prominent position in the society of a quarter of a century ago, says the New York World, She is a sister to the Duchess of Athol, to Georgiana, counters of Dudley and to Georgians, counters of Dudley, and to Lady Mordaunt.

"From my earliest childhood," she writes, "I heard of him. He was always tall and lank; he chewed tobacco and expectorated freely; his nassi con versation ranged between integers, plantations and Wall street; he ad-dressed built his male acquaintances 'uncle' and the other half as sonny; he invariably sat on table and placed his large, flat feet on the chimneypiece; his hair was long and his voice drawling; he used to say, Wanl, stranger, I guess not."

"I went my way into the world, and straightway I met his compat Everywhere they are honored guests and popular companions. But when among these cultured and easy man-nered people shall I see his beloved untwanging accent? Bitter, bitter is my disappointment! How I should ap land a 'guess' or a 'calculation!

The American girls, too, where they? Those golden girls who, inco tinently leaving 'poppa' and 'menume' with their superfluous baggage, cross the ocean, flock dollar laden upon an undisguised search for a British lord I meet American girls in plenty, and many of them beautiful, most of them charming, all of them well dressed but their manners are full of repo Neither do they startle assemblies of modest people with daring witticisms It cannot be that these, the American eltizen and the transatiantic betree have never existed!
