ATTORNEY and COUNSELORS &

D. L. WARD Attorney at Law,

The White House China. To those who are influenced by the old supervittion of sitting down to table dillricen in number, an invitation from the president to dine at the White House of the new state service of china may well be loosed at aukanee. Whether intentionally or by accident the mystic number is enriously repent ed in the crest and even in the transa ton by which the service was ordered. To begin with, there are, of course To begin with, there are, of course, thirteen stars and thirteen bars in the anoth, representing the original thirteen states of the Union. In one claw the engle groups thirteen bolts, and in the other an olive branch upon which are thirteen in eas and thirteen barries. The pinkers of the engle, too, have this sentence and if will be found that there are thirteen letters in the motto, "In Pluribus Unum."

Further, there are thirteen letters in the Christian sames of the president and his wife—Theodore and Amile—and thirmen letters also in Stafford-shire, the county in Insuland in which the Wedgwood were is manufactured, the Wedgwood were is unnufactured, but perhaps the most significant fact of all in this respect is that the service was delivered on Friday. Feb. 13. of this year.

Under these circumstances it would seem to require only a party of thirteen to make any one sensitive in such matters search his mind diligently for in excuse to absent himself from the table.

There is perhaps no elevator.

There is perhaps no elevator in the world more exclusive than that provided at the capitol for the supreme court of the United States. That elevator main floor, on which is located the sumain floor, on which is located the suprema court of the United Sintes. It is a small siveator in that with its conductor, three porth farms of jutices of the supreme court of the Unite of Sintes would hit it is one of the try little designs of electric sicrators and is finished in magnificent style.

The interesting thing about this ex-clusive elevator is the fact that the jus-tices, wedged as they are to make can-toms, have not yet got out of their habit formed in here the new elevator the Burt place, because a family by that name had first cleared the land and built the house on it. I was a boy then—a very small boy—but I remember well the elder Burt. He was a stern, dark man with a most violent and vindictive temper. I remember one Sunday at meeting when he nearly wore out a big black snake whip on one of his mules. His family were all afraid of him, and his neighbors avoid-out his wise he was the out-of his the of him when he got into one or his his of passion. And yet, outside of this, he was a good citizen, a good father, a devoted lusband and noted for his open handed liberality. It was his fiendish temper which ruined his whole life. In olden times I reckon they would have said that he was possessed of a devil, and he was a devil of a temper. "Well," resumed the farmer after a moment's rumination,"the Burts owned several niggers, and among them was a likely, lively gal named Jude, who was a kind of house servant end maid to Mrs. Burt. Perhaps it was the consciousness of her superfority to the regular field hands, perhaps sympathy with her mistress, who usually received the full force of Burt's wrath when one of his spells overtook him, but whatever the cause may have been the effect of the cause may have been the effect. fect was that Jude gave her master some impudence and carned his dislike. From that on Whenever he flew into a rage Jude came in for a large share of the storm and was frequently threatened with a severe whipping,

"Til thrash the life out of you," Burt is reported to have said to her one day.

"Ef ye do I'll h'unt ye, sho's my name's Jude! the impolitic reply is said to have been.

"Burt flew into a paroxysm of rage, Insane in its violence. He had the unhappy girl strung up and himself beat her until his strength was exhausted, and he was a man of powerful frame. When she was taken dawn Jude was senseless. She was put in an empty cornerib and given no food. In a day or two she died, probably from the effects of the beating, maybe from the want of attention and food, perhaps from both causes. Well, now comes the singular part of this business. Jude was buried in a little clump of pines just across a creek which ran in front of the Burt mansion, about 200 or more yards distant. Jude had said that if Burt executed his threat she would ha'nr him. She kept her promise. Oh, you needn't laugh. I don't attempt to account for it, but it's a fact, and there are boo-people in my county who will

"How is that?"

"Well, the light, which is a ball of pale red fire about the size of a coosaut, moves along about five feet above the ground and never falters or healtages."

Jude's grave has long since vaulahed,
