In the matter of arrests, the Raleigh police do not make a good showing, and the example to be made of the very few thieves caught, does not cover the fact that the losses were very heavy, more so than they should have been, and this is likely to result to the detriment of future fairs.

The average visitor to a fair expects to get rid of whatever money he carries to the fair, but he wants to spend it him self, even if the shows may be poor, but does not want to be relieved of all his money at once.

Il is to the credit of Raleigh that no concealment has been made of this pick pocket spidemics, the worse has been made public, and there ought to be no further "exhibit" of this kind permitted In the future.

Early Liverpool advices were quite up to expectations due to profit taking by recent buyers. Later on, however, there was a better showing there, and this restored confidence. Receipts were point-
