"I am pleased to give my experience with Wine of Cardul as I am very grateful for its help. After my first baby was born I could not seem to regain my strength, although the doctor gave me a tonic which he considered very superior, but instead of getting better I grew weaker every day. My husband came home one evening with some Wine of Cardui and insisted that I take it for a week and see what it would do for me. As he seemed to have so much faith in it I did take the imedicine and was very grateful to find my strength slowly returning. In two weeks I was out of bed and in a month I was able to take up my usual duties. I am very enthusiastic in its praise."

Lam very enthusiastic in its praise."

Wine of Cardui builds up the woman. It stops all unnatural drains and strains—irregularities which are responsible for barrenness and miscarriage. It makes a woman strong and healthy and able to pass through pregnancy and childbirth with little suffering. After the ordeal is passed the Wine prepares a woman for a speedy recovery to health and activity.

A SUDDEN RETURN

Edgar Carroll went away to ma home. After that no more letters came, nor did Edgar Carroll, frene's cheek grew paler and her step less clastic, and anxious friends began to shake their heads and hint of failing health. Her father became alarmed. Physiclans counseled travel and change of air. The experiment was tried, but without perceptible benefit.

During the absence of Mr. Hayne and his daughter a stranger had taken up his abode in the place of their resiwhence he came nobody pretended to know, yet every man, woman and child was ready to vouch for his respectability. He was a bachelor and lived alone, rarely appearing in society, yet often enough to avoid the appearance of shunning it.

His habits of seclusion were soon measurably abandoned. He was constantly meeting Irene, first by seeming accident at the houses of such friends as she was accustomed to visit. then by direct calls upon herself.

At one of these interviews the conversation turned upon Australia, where Mr. Newcome had spent some years. In the course of it he mentioned name which caused Irene to start. "Edgar-Edgar Carroll! You knew him, then?" she managed to say, with

"He was my most intimate friend," replied Mr. Newcome, with seeming carelessness, at the same time scanning keenly her agitated face-"that is, until he married."

"Married!" "It was considered a good match, I believe," Mr. Newcome added, pre-tending not to notice the effect of his words. "The lady was a wealthy colonist's daughter, an only child, and all

The blow fell with cruel force. For a moment Irene's faculties were stun-

Some months later, when Irene's father hinted that Mr. Newcome had asked permission to become her suitor and that his own sanction had been already given, he was agreeably surprised at the manner in which the aunouncement was received.

Irene's face was paler than usual, and her manner was more disturbed. but her father was in too high spirits and Mr. Newcome too polite to notice the change. They were in the midst of an agreeable chat when a visitor was announced, who insisted on seeing Mr. Hayne alone.

In no gracious mood Mr. Hayne passed into an adjacent apartment, whence excited voices were soon beard.

At the sound of one of them both Irene and Mr. Newcome started to their feet.

"So the villain is here!" exclaimed Edgar Carroll, thrusting open the door. But Irene's white face met his angry gaze, and he stood motionless.

Newcome for the moment had believed himself in personal peril and had shrunk back coweringly, but a moment's reflection assured him that in the presence of Mr. Hayne and his daughter he had no cause for fear. "In the distant land to which we had both gone in quest of gold this man and myself became friends. We shared the same tent and had no secrets from each other. In treasure seeking I proved the more fortunate of the two, and my gains had already reached the point I had proposed they should attain when my friend suggested a visit to some unexplored islands of which he pretended to have heard rumors and of

Leaving the crew on board, my friend and my-self went ashore and began our search. In a secluded spot I was felled to the earth by a blow from behind and left for dead.

"On righting consciousness I found myself alone. I ran to the shore, but the vessel was no longer in sight.

ery means in my power sought to make my presence known.

"But still the ship held her course. Frantie with despair, I rushed into the waves, determined to swim toward her while strength held out, when at length she shoriened sail, and I saw a bost lowered from her side.

"I conducted my deliverers to the treasure I had found. There was enough for us all. I returned to find myself robbed of my precious gains, whose place of concealment was known only to myself and him who had sought my life to get possession of them. But the loss I regarded as a trific. I was now the possessor of treble the amount."
