MAD KING LUDWIG.

He Was a Patron of Wagner and Hater of All Women. King Ludwig II. of Bavaria, the 'mad king," was a patron of Wagner and a hater of all women. Fitzgerald Molloy in his "Romance of Royalty" tells an amusing story of Ludwig's pecultarities; "At times the king sumned opera singers to the palace, These it was his pleasure to listen to as he gilded noiselessly over the lake in the winter gardon which he had constructed on the top of the royal resi-dence in Münich. This garden was so large that it extended along the whole length of the west wing of the palace. Its splendor and its perfume made it seem an enchanted place. Countless roses hung from its high arched roof. Thousands of lights glowed softly from under the leaves of paims, plantains and other tropical trees. From its blossoming shrubberies rose the slender ninarets and glittering cupolas of kiosks. Parrakeets flew from branch to branch; waterfalls splashed musically; on the walls views of the Himalaya mountains were painted so skillfully as to give an impression of space and distance. The waters of the lake were colored blue and scented with violets, while its banks were covered with hyacinths and orchids.

"Here, in a golden boat shaped like that in which Lobengrin appears and propelled by a mechanical swan, his majesty, clad in sliver armor, like an enchanted knight, spent the hours when the world slept, listening to stringed instruments or to singers concealed behind foliage. He was silent. solltary, dreaming, like the pale dwellers in lotus land. Here Wagner was occasionally permitted to bear his majesty company, a favor once extended to Fraulein Schefszky, an opera singer, whose superb voice had won his enthusiastic admiration. Unwilling that this should be limited to her voice, the lady sent him verses hinting of her ardent love and made him presents that he accepted on condition that be paid for them-an arrangement that allowed her to reap considerable profit, as she charged him three times their cost, until an exorbitant demand for some gift awoke his secretary's suspicion and led to the discovery and the dismissal of the fraulein from royal favor.

"One evening she was invited to sit with him and Wagner in the boat. It seemed to ber that she had reached the highest place in his favor. Therefore, in a moment of silence succeeding her ong, while the swan noiselessly drew them through the blue tinted perfumed water and his majesty, lost in reverle, stared into space, the lady leaned for ward and gently passed her fingers through his hair. Shocked and disgusted by such familiarity, he pushed her away so roughly that the boat upset and flung all three into the lake. The king clambered up the bank and strode away without turning to see what became of his companions, and the prima donna, drenched and disillusioned, was rescued by the composer with the assistance of a boathook."

Apple Acids The acids of the apple are of singular use for men of sedentary habits, whose livers are sluggish in action, those acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters which if retained would make the brain heavy and dull or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other ailied troubles. Some such experience must have led to the custom of taking apple sauce with roast pork, rich goose and other like dishes. The malic sold of ripe apples, either raw or cooked, will neutralize any excess of chalky matter engendered by eating too much meat. It is also the fact that such fruits as the apple, the pear and the plum, when taken ripe and without sugar, diminish acidity in the stomach rather than provoke it. Their vege table sauces and juices are converted into alkaline carbonates by the chemical action of the stomach juices, which tend to counteract scidity.

Monkeys In Captivity. "To see monkeys kept in a cage is to me a pitiful and saddening exhibition," says an English writer. "The little caricatures of humanity in my possession are let out of their houses in the morning and allowed to play and gambol about the grounds during the daytime to their hearts' content, Those who have seen monkeys only in cage can form but a faint idea of the joyousness of the happy little creatures as they bound from tree to tree in the enjoyment of their freedom. At evening time they all return to their house eithout giving any trouble.

"Monkeys, like most wild animals, are very shy before strangers, and if a visitor happens to arrive who is un-known to them they keep perfectly still and hide themselves so well among the foliage that the stranger could not realize that he was being watched by several pairs of the sharpest little eyes

The Pygmies of Spain.

As might have been expected, the dwarf race of Morecco and the Atlas has been traced to Europe, and fairly pure types are found in Spain, especially in the province of Gerona. These people are only three feet seven incline to three feet nine inches high and are otherwise characterized by a yollow skin, bread, square face, Mosgolian eyes and red half of a wooly against. Specimens of them are occasionally to be seen in the markets of Salamanes, and there is said to be a number in the Col de Tuess and the valley of Rihas, several bours by rati

"My back was so bad that when I got down on the bed I could scarcely get up. There was no strength in my tack and it ached all over. I thought I had rheumatism. The kidney secretions were dark colored and full of sediment. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and procured a box at Bradham's Pharmacy and used it. The very first dose helped me and after finishing the first box I bought a second. The pain in my lack disappeared and I was stronger and better in every way I am grateful for what this remedy did for me and you are welcome to use my name se an endorser of its claims.
