tion of the institution is so complicated and wither so interesting that it is expecially valuable to note some of the methods adopted in the land of the kaiser to secure justice and protect the rights of the accused.

According to Gorman law, trial by jury is limited to criminal procedure and to cases within the competence of a single court composed of three judges and twelve furors. The imor receives no pay for his services, because the office of juror is an honorary one.

Matry classes of persons are excluded from jury service. Among these may be mentioned not only such persons as have suffered a criminal judgment or such as are on trial on criminal charges, but such also as are restricted. In the use of their property by judicial decres.

jury is selected in a list of persons who are eligible to service as lay members of local courts. None of these lay members of local courts. None of these lay members serves more than five days in a year, and this provides a large list for jury selection.

The presiding official in each commune must each year process.

The presiding official in each commune must each year prepare a list, which is exhibited for public inspection for one week, at the end of which time the unprotested names are sent to a judge in the district to which the commune belongs.

Wasteful, but they are unquestionably rare. Heavy crops of fruit are a severe drain upon the fertility of the soil.

Coment For Farm Buildings.

As lumber is getting scareer from your to year and also more expensive, the farmer must look for other material with which to take its place.

Dead No. says a Vermont farmer in Rural New Yorker. Many things can be made of cement that will be as lasting as stone and cost less than wood—such things as stable floors in basement barrs, where plank lasts but a short time; dornstens walks water trongly reserdoorsteps, walks, water troughs, reservoirs or tanks, hitching posts, hog troughs and many other things. The average farmer can do this work after a little practice as well as to hire an expert at $3 per day or more. Never use anything but the best material, consisting of portland cement weigh-ing 400 pounds to the barrel, costing in this section about $2.25 per barrel; summoned for Jury service and who are meant to be excluded, but whose presence on a jury does not of their necessarily invalidate a verdict. In this proup are persons under thirty years of age, persons who within three years have received support from public charities for themsalves or their ramities and persons who are employed as servants.

A great many people are as a special privilege exempt from jury service in Germany. These include officials, persons employed in a public capacity in the service of religion, persons in active military service and teachers in the public schools, but attorneys are not numbered among these so privileged. Physicians, however, and apothecaries who show that they are unable to bear the expense of this unpuid jury service are among the privileged.

The basis of the list from which the jury is selected is a fist of persons who are eligible to service as lay members to the fact that by the great is selected in a fist of persons who are eligible to service as lay members to the fact that by the great it is selected to service as lay members to the fact that by the great it is selected in a fist of persons who are eligible to service as lay members to the fact that by the great life in this section about $2.25 per barrel; clean, sharp, coarse sand and clean lake gravel in size from beans to walnuts. Any one having the above material can make many things that are necessary on the farm at small cost.

Feeding Orchard Trees.

While manuring orchards is done by some in a systematic way, the great mass of fruit trees are not receiving any special attention as to feeding, says a Pennayivania farmer in American Agriculturist. Often the orchard has to produce crops in the farm rotation with only about as much plant food as the rest of the farm received. This is better than no feeding, for the trees will appropriate to themselves at least a portion. Too often orchards say that stable manure has proved the most satisfactory. This may be due to the farm that the stable manure has proved the mo most satisfactory. This may be due to the fact that by the use of it both humus and plant food are given to the soil. There may be soils so rich in plant food that fertilizing would be
