STRENGTH TO RESIST RATHER THAN ADVICE. IS THE NEED.

"I pray thee cease thy counsel, Which falls into mine ears as profit less As water in a sieve."

And so must ever prove vain the counsel given to any person who has reached the years of discernment, who refuses to take the course of right, the way of truth, in proference to the wrong.

Moral instruction seems ever hard to give. Cicero, is quoted, as saying, "nobody can give you better advice than yourself," and every person must candidly feel the truth of this remark.

But two things greatly operate against following a right course at times, and all the time, regardless of external influences and conditions these being lack of a moral force within, which fears the effect of pursuing a course that the world may laugh at, and second a lack of energy to act, because drifting is easier and more comfortable.

It seems an easy matter to summo strength to resist inclinations which are wrongly directed. It will not be, if the mind shakes off every feeling of indolence, and places itself in a resistent attitude, to honestly analyze, and see how the following out to its legiti- ly of J. Walter Pelletier. mate end will result, the pursuit of the passing inclination.

The genius is not necessarily a person of force of character along moral lines, yet a moral force in one's character may prove more a basis for achieving greatness, which mere talent could never attain.

It is the knowledge of knowing thyself, and taking one's own advice along true lines of action, which will give the personal resisting power, that no outaide human counsel can give. It is this week stopping at the Morton House

THE DUKE'S DECISION.

Wellington's Verdict In the Case

a Stolen Kiss. "The Millitary Reminiscences of a Retired Colonel" contains the following story relating how the Duke of We lington overcame a somewhat embarrassing difficulty: The sentry on duty one day at the gate of Hampton Court palace many years ago was asked the time by a young lady, the daughter of the widow of a distinguished widow distinguished soldler, who occupled apartments in the palace. She happened to be wearing a dainty apron, and, appearing to the soldier to be a neat lady's maid, his reply to her question was, "Half past kissing time," and—a kiss, The indignant young lady fied to report the impertinence to her mothe who promptly sent a letter of complaint to the colonel of the sentry's regiment The colonel regretted the occurrence and referred the lady, balf in jest and half in earnest, to the commander in chief. To the highest quarter accord ingly she went for redress and received the following reply: Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, while regretting the occurrence of which Miss Q. complains, begs to say that he has searched the army regulations and the articles of war, and he can nowhere find that kissing is a punishable offense from a military point of view. It is against or-ders for a sentry to convense when on a minutry point of view. It is against of-ders for a centry to converse when on duty, but in this instance it appears that Miss Q. opened the disversation, and the sentry, although he answered in an usual manner, committed no actual <sup>3</sup> of discibles.
