Death of Garrett Taylor.

Mr. J. F. Taylor received a telegraph e message yesterday morning annoucing the death of his son Garrett in New York. No other particulars were obtainable as the telegram was received just prior to the departure of the train and haste was necessary in order to get away.

Garrett had been in poor health for several months and some time ago he came to his home from New York and then went to Asheville. He returned to New York in a short time but the disease from which he was a sufferer, had made such in-roads on his constitution that he could not withstand it.

Further announcement will be made in the Journal concerning the funeral arrangements.

One purchases away and left a few on board the boat. A strange negro appeared on the scene. The meions were the magnet, his eyes sparkled, his teeth shone and had it not been for the ebon stain of Nature's brush, his cheeks would have flushed. His steps became brisker, in fact they became strides. The attraction grew stronger, Splash! And then a coon was seen dragging himself from the depths of the am still in business, and with New Trent. The charm was over. Amid the shouts of the wharf loungers, the negro crestfallen and disappointed flitted away, the water streaming from his garments as he went.
