THE SEASON'S WARNINGS

With this the beginning of the first of the summer months, warnings in the matter of health and warnings agains physical dangers, and against trespas of various kinds, are freely given out, and like the placards in the city parks, to keep off the grass, there often seen to be no place of comfort, or thing to enjoy, so that mankind must kept moving, at the same time is kept fully aware that to move, has its dangers.

It is in the seemingly unimportant affairs, that the greatest danger lurks, and only through the observance of rational living, that so many evils can be avoided, so that the matter of ninety degrees temperature need not mean the incapacitating of anyone from work or the season's pleasures. For in mankind if the mental condition be right, with good thoughts and a clean mind, the refusal to worry, and instead making the best of every apparently bad situation, there will develop the physical reserve force which will be a barrier to atmospheric influences, and heat or cold will offer no obstacle to the daily

In the physical life of the people of any community, cleanliness of streets and premises is the essential which means safety to every individual in health, and good health is the greatest of economies, for the butcher and baker can more easily be paid than the doctor, and every attendant expense which sickness involves.

Except for children, there should be no bewares, in the way over extention, or over indulgence in what the season offers so temptingly, and which the coolless person will thoughtlessly appropriate for the individual gratification of the moment. And yet so many of a larger growth, children in impulse and want of self restraint are to be must be put up, the warning displayed, lest there be the invasion into precincts which should be avoided, and which if entered, mean injury to the person, and even more serious, may endanger, if not destroy life.
