Alas for the community with its "if" citizen! Why he would be the ideal, except for his condition al attitude on every subject and and everything, for he is enthus iastic up to the point of excution, of becoming an active participant, the community's most eager worker and shouter, when "if"-and it is all over. Its effect upon outsiders who are asked to come with their capital to assist local enterprises is most prejudi cial. For what capitalist wants to invest in a community where he hears so frequently that some obstacle is to be overcome, and "if" that was not only so, how much better it would be.

The hope of every community is to so develop and grow that the "but" and "if" citizen shall be relegated so far to the rear of the progressive procession that he becomes just a follower, whose presence is simply tolerated. His objections cannot have any effect because the community is too busy going ahead to look backward. Its progressive momentum has grown until it cannot be stopped, much less held back, tho. the voice of the "but" and "if' citizen should be heard.
