COURT ETHICS.

A murder trial is not presumed to develop niceties of thought or language. The attendants at such a trial except those directly concerned, must naturally be morbid, for certainly there can be little less than animal grossness, in watching the condemned, and listening to testimony that cannot but partake of the animal, appealing to the lowest condition of man's nature.

Such a trial as has occupied the time and attention of this community during the past week has been specially debasing. Every association in its connection has been revolting to good morals. That decency has to submit to such scenes and language, is part of the necessity that makes mur der an open matter in its trial. That too often gives ingress to youth, makes an open scene for the public pillorying of men and women, their secret lives exposed to the laugh of the crowd, their sins to the gibe of lawyers, reflected in the snicker of the multitude, that hangs upon each word of witness and question of coun-

And yet in wantonness of even a murder trial, however revolting, there would seem that a rule of professional ethics should rule and control. That while riot of laaguage and rampage of action towards witnesses might prevail, yet counsel would not seek to bring each other into the cess pool of iniquity, as possible partakers in the excesses of those brought before the court tribunal. But to the mortification of this citizenship, such has been the case, as was witnessed and heard in court. Such an act has no excuse. The court, in Judge and counsel cannot lower their dignity and char Department of State-Certificate of acter to become the ribald jest of the multitude, through the word To all to Whom These Presents May or act of one of its own membership. Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard-more women's secrets than any other ones or women in the country. These secrets are not secrets of falls or shame, but the escents of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their ex-pensations in proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent, of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and alteractive cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the mass treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that reserve applies to the treatment of more than half-a-mil-lies women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and smilles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude scoonied him by women,

CHAPTER XVII-Tom stole the $40,000 CHAPTER XVII—Tom stole the $40,000 in order to make investments to win the love of Mrs. Dace. He tried to have the theft laid to the charge of his rival Mackay. His friend Le Duc retires from the case and Abner Halliday and the world at large never know of Tom's guilt. The fickle-hearled Mrs. Dace elopes with Mackay. Clare and Bruce are happily married, and Tom lives on unhappily, his career embittered by his foolish, profitiess act of crime and revenge.

the digarette i may nothing to go with it. Therefore I supposed he would awake in the morning, come away, and that no harm would have been done. And when I feared that by reason of several accidents he was in danger of being suspected, I said everything I could to clear him except to acknowledge my own guilt."

"I am glad that you have explained that the way you have. I like you a whole lot the better for it. But how about your mentioning the fact of the Mackay?"

"You may look at it in that light if you choose. I utterly despised the man; knew that he would do me all the harm that he could by fair means or foul, and did not care what hap pened to him. I did it with the idea that it might possibly furnish a false clue for you to tire yourself out on."

"Anything more?" he urged as I paused. Utterly within his power I made this last appeal.

"Only this. Knowing that I am a criminal and by all law should go to prison for many years, probably to dle there, I have"this to say in justification of myself. Until 1 com mitted this crime I had always been an honest man with no thought of being otherwise and with no desire to J. harm a living thing. But because Phone 99. of my love for a woman for whom would this moment gladly give my life, and because I could see no other way of gaining her except by specuhatica, I fell into temptation as many a better man has done. Driven onward by a love at whose command I would have faced hades itself, I used large gum, and the rest in the first break in that stock. In my desperation I committed this crime as the only means of getting more funds with which to win that for which I would have staked my life as readily as I did my liberty. Had I succeeded, I should have married this woman and lived an honest life thereafter; having lost I will bear whatever punishment comes to me without whimpering; and should I live through my imprisonment will seek to atone for my crime in my after life. With my bosom almost bursting, and staring straight shead through dimmed eyes, I assent ed. "I will go almost immediately But there is one thing which I must do before leaving. I must first see Matie-Mrs. Dace, I mean, and have a long talk with her perhaps several of them-and that may delay me for a tew days. I love her better than all else in the world, and if she really cares for me, maybe she will give me another chance to recover my self financially.
