The Statesville Landmark says it "hopes the Democratic State Conven National Convention because they are senator, governors and ax governors. or because they have filled that position." "Men who have heretofore bren honored should stand aside for others; honors, This is not a fight on anybody States. or for anybody but is simply an expression of the Landmark's honest opinion.

And the Journal adds to the above, that it is to be hoped that the Democratic party in the sev- a eral counties of the State will not take all its nominees for the next legislature from the professional ranks, but will give the agricultural interests representation on its legislative ticket. There is such the line which is to divide West Vinginia a thing as making politics over and Maryland, professional. It must be remem bered that North Capolina is an agricultural state to a great extent, so that the farming interests should have its representation in the General Assembly, accordingly. Such a representation adds political stability to the party, outside of its party political equity.

That there are Democrats who will make the personal sacrifice prescribed by one of the best phyis shown by the following from the Wilmington Dispatch, editorially. is a regular prescription. It is com-Colonel Boyden is well known in posed of the best tonics known, comthis city and section.

He burst into a mad laugh, while Christine gave a disconsolate moan behind her velvet mask. With a tragic gesture, she flung out her two arms, which fixed a barrier of white flesh against the door.

"In the name of our love, Raoul, you shall not pass! He stopped. What had she said?

In the name of their love? Never before had she confessed that she loved him. And yet she had had opportunities enough-. . . Pooh, her only object was to gain a few seconds! She wished to give the Red Death time to escape. . . And. in accents of

He tried to disobey her; but she at the moment when Raoul was on the turned round and repeated her gesture of farewell with such authority that he dared not move a step.

He watched her till she was out of sight. Then he also went down among the crowd, hardly knowing what he was doing, with throbbing temples and an aching heart: and, as he crossed the dancing-floor, he asked if anybody had seen Red Death. Yes. every one had seen Red Death; but Raoul could not find him: and, at two o'clock in the morning, he turned down the passage, behind the scenes, hideous mask of death! . . . The that led to Christine Dane's dressing-

His footsteps took him to that room where he had first known suffering. He tapped at the door. There was no answer. He entered, as he had entered when he looked everywhere for "the man's voice." The room was empty. A gas-jet was burning, turned down low. He saw some writing-paper on a little desk. He thought of writing to Christine, but he heard steps in the passage. He had only time to hide in the inner room, which was separated from the dressingroom by a curtain.

Christine entered, took off her mask with a weary movement and flung it on the table. She sighed and let her pretty head fall into her two hands. What was she thinking of? Of Raoul? No, for Raoul heard her murmur: "Poor Erik!"

At first, he thought he must be mistaken. To begin with, he was persuaded that, if any one was to be pitied, it was he, Raoul. It would have been quite natural if she had said, "Poor Raoul," after what had happened between them. But, shaking her head, she repeated, "Poor Erik!"
