OFFICIAL PAPER OF NEW BERN AND CRAVEN COUNTY.

New Bern, N. C. June 12, 1912

TO COMMEMORATE NEW BERNIANS.

The recent unveilings in Raleigh of monuments to notable North Carolinians, now dead, has had a stimulating effect and aroused patriotic feelings among the people. Both local and national history is best perpetuated through the visible sign, monument or building, that records the deed to all coming generations, of the men and women who have stood for great things, and thereby accomplished great good for state or nation, in their generation, which also has its enduring effect for good upon future generations.

Capitol Square in Raleigh is becoming with each monument erected therein, a more valuable place for ever North Carolinian to visit, both for historical and patriotic reasons. It makes the Capitol City of North Carolina more noted in the eyes of outside visitors to this State, attracting them and impressing upon them history, that every monument is certain to call particular attention to. These monuments at Raleigh every North Carolinian feels a personal interest in, and takes pride in looking around the square.

New Bern has had her notable citizens, that have contributed to North Carolina history. Nothing worthy marks in bronze or stone, in public places their deeds. Why should not there be erected in this city a monument, in some public place, to Gaston, Stanly, Badger, Hawks, or others whose records are familiar to all students of North Carolina history? It would have an inspiring effect, locally, especially on the youth of this generation, and through a contribution by all the people, there would be aroused a patriotic feeling that would do good.

The PHANTOM OF THE OPERA

By Gaston Leroux
 Author of THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW RACE and THE PERFUME OF THE LADY IN BLACK. Illustrations by M. G. Kettner. Copyright 1911 by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

The pocket was empty. And the curious thing was that the pin remained, stuck in the same place.

Richard and Moncharmin turned pale. There was no longer any doubt about the witchcraft.

"The ghost!" muttered Moncharmin. But Richard suddenly sprang upon his partner.

"No one but you has touched my pocket! Give me back my twenty-thousand francs! Give me back my twenty-thousand francs!"

"On my soul," sighed Moncharmin, who was ready to swoon, "on my soul, I swear that I haven't got it!"

Then somebody knocked at the door. Moncharmin opened it automatically, seemed hardly to recognize Mercier, his business manager, exchanged a few words with him, without knowing what he was saying and, with an unconscious movement, put the safety-pin, for which he had no further use, into the hands of his bewildered subordinate.

CHAPTER XVIII.
The Commissary, the Viscount and the Perian.

The first words of the commissary of police, on entering the manager's office, were to ask after the missing prima donna.

"Is Christine Dease here?"

"Christine Dease here?" echoed Richard. "No. Why?"

As for Moncharmin, he had not the strength left to utter a word.

Richard repeated, for the commissary and the compact crowd which had followed him into the office observed an impressive silence.

"Why do you ask if Christine Dease is here, M. le commissaire?"

"Because she has to be found," declared the commissary of police solemnly.

"What do you mean, she has to be found? Has she disappeared?"

"In the middle of the performance!"

"In the middle of the performance? This is extraordinary!"

"Isn't it? And what is quite as extraordinary is that you should first learn it from me!"

"Yes," said Richard, taking his head in his hands and muttering, "What is this new business? Oh, it's enough to make a man mad in his resignation!"

And he pulled a few hairs out of his moustache without even knowing what he was doing.

"So she disappeared in the middle of the performance?" he repeated.

"Yes, she was carried off in the Prison Act, at the moment when she was invoking the aid of the angels; but I doubt if she was carried off by an angel."

"And I am sure that she was!"

Everybody looked round. A young man, pale and trembling with excitement, repeated:

"I am sure of it!"

"Sure of what?" asked Mifroid.

"That Christine Dease was carried off by an angel, M. le commissaire, and I can tell you his name."

"Ah, M. le Vicomte de Chagny! So you maintain that Christine Dease was carried off by an angel; an angel of the opera, no doubt?"

"Yes, monsieur, by an angel of the opera; and I will tell you where he lives . . . when we are alone."

"You are right, monsieur."

And the commissary of police, inviting Raoul to take a chair, cleared the room of all the rest, excepting the managers.

Then Raoul spoke:

"M. le commissaire, the angel is called Erik, he lives in the opera and he is the Angel of Music!"

"The Angel of Music! Really! That is very curious!"

"The Angel of Music! And, turning to the managers, M. Mifroid asked, 'Have you an Angel of Music on the premises, gentlemen?'"

Richard and Moncharmin shook their heads without even speaking.

"Oh," said the viscount, "those gentlemen have heard of the opera ghost. Well, I am in a position to state that the opera ghost and the Angel of Music are one and the same person; and his real name is Erik."

M. Mifroid rose and looked at Raoul attentively.

"I beg your pardon, monsieur, but is it your intention to make fun of the law? And, if not, what is all this about the opera ghost?"

"I say that these gentlemen have heard of him."

"Gentlemen, it appears that you know the opera ghost!"

Richard rose, with the remaining hairs of his moustache in his hand.

"No, M. le Commissaire, we do not know him, but we wish that we did, for this very evening he has robbed us of twenty thousand francs!"

And Richard turned a terrible look on Moncharmin, which seemed to say:

"Give me back the twenty thousand francs, or I'll kill the whole story!"

Moncharmin understood what he meant, for, with a distorted gesture, he said:

"Oh, I've got it, everything was done this evening, carried off an opera singer and steals twenty thousand francs is a ghost who must have his hands very full! If you don't mind, we will take the questions in order. The singer first, the twenty thousand francs after. Come, M. de Chagny, let us try to talk seriously. You believe that Miss Christine Dease has been carried off by an individual called Erik. Do you know this person? Have you seen him?"

"Yes."

"Where?"

"In a churchyard."

M. Mifroid gave a start, began to scruitinise Raoul again and said:

"Of course! That's where ghosts usually hang out. . . . And what were you doing in that churchyard?"

"Monsieur," said Raoul, "I can quite understand how absurd my replies must seem to you. But I beg you to believe that I am in full possession of my faculties. The safety of the person dearest to me in the world is at stake. I should like to convince you in a few words, for time is pressing and every minute is valuable. Unfortunately, if I do not tell you the strangest story that ever was from the beginning, you will not believe me. I will tell you all I know about the opera ghost, M. Commissary. Alas, I do not know much!"

"Never mind, go on, go on!" exclaimed Richard and Moncharmin, suddenly interested.

Unfortunately for their hopes of learning some detail that could put them on the track of their boaxer, they were soon compelled to accept the fact that M. Raoul de Chagny had completely lost his head. All that story about Ferron-Guilors, death's heads and enchanted violins, could only have taken birth in the disordered brain of a youth mad with love. It was evident, also, that M. Commissary Mifroid shared their view; and the magistrate would certainly have cut short the incoherent narrative if circumstances had not taken it upon themselves to interrupt it.

The door opened and a man entered, curiously dressed in an enormous frock-coat and a tall hat, at once shabby and shiny, that came down to his ears. He went up to the commissary and spoke to him in a whisper. It was doubtless a detective come to deliver an important communication.

During this conversation M. Mifroid did not take his eyes off Raoul. At last, addressing him, he said:

"Monsieur, we have talked enough about the ghost. We will now talk about yourself a little, if you have no objection; you were to carry off Miss Christine Dease tonight?"

"Yes, M. le commissaire."

"After the performance?"

"Yes, M. le commissaire."

"All your arrangements were made?"

"Yes, M. le commissaire."

"The carriage that brought you was to take you both away. . . . There were fresh horses in readiness at every stage."

"That is true, M. le commissaire."

"And nevertheless the Rotunda awaiting your orders, is it not?"

"Yes, M. le commissaire."

"Did you know that there were three other carriages there, in addition to yours?"

"I did not pay the least attention."

"They were the carriages of Miss Sorelli, which could not find room in the Cour de l'Administration; of Carletta, and of your brother, M. le Comte de Chagny. . . ."

"Very likely. . . ."

"What is certain is that, though your carriage and Sorelli's and Carletta's are still there, by the Rotunda pavement, M. le Comte de Chagny's carriage is gone."

"This has nothing to say to me. I beg your pardon. Was not M. le Comte opposed to your marriage with Miss Dease?"

"That is a matter that only concerns the family."

"You have answered my question; he was opposed to it. . . . and that was why you were carrying Christine Dease out of your brother's reach. . . . Well, M. de Chagny, allow me to inform you that your brother has been smarter than you. It is he who has carried off Christine Dease!"

"Oh, impossible!" moaned Raoul, pressing his hand to his heart. "Are you sure?"

"Immediately after the artist's disappearance, which was procured by means which we have still to ascertain, he swung into his carriage, which drove right across Paris at a furious pace."

"Across Paris?" asked poor Raoul, in a hoarse voice. "What do you mean by across Paris?"

"Across Paris and out of Paris, by the Brussels road."

"Oh," cried the young man, "I shall catch them!"

"And he rushed . . . at the office. "And bring back to me" cried the commissary of police. "And that's a fact with you, isn't it?"

OLD-TIME REMEDY DARKENS THE HAIR

Gives Color, Lustre to Faded and Gray Hair—Dandruff Quickly Removed.

For generations Sage and Sulphur have been used for hair and scalp troubles. Almost everyone knows the value of such a combination for keeping the hair a good even color, for curing itching, itching scalp and falling hair, and for promoting the growth of the hair. Years ago the only way to get a hair tonic of this kind was to make it in the home, which was troublesome and not always satisfactory. Now, days, almost any up-to-date druggist can supply his patrons with a ready-to-use product, skillfully prepared in perfectly equipped laboratories.

An ideal preparation of this sort is Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, in which Sage and Sulphur are combined with other valuable remedies for scalp troubles and thin, weak hair that is losing its color or coming out. After using this remedy for a few days, you will notice the color gradually coming back, your scalp will feel better, the dandruff will soon be gone, and in less than a month's time there will be a wonderful difference in your hair.

Don't neglect your hair if it is full of dandruff, losing its color or coming out. Get a fifty-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur from your druggist, and see what a few days' treatment will do for you. All druggists sell it, under guarantee that the money will be refunded if the remedy is not exactly as represented.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

TO THE DEMOCRATIC VOTERS OF CRAVEN COUNTY:

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Register of Deeds, subject to the Democratic Primary on July 2nd. If nominated and elected, I pledge myself to discharge the duties of said office to the best of my ability, with the assistance of a competent corps of clerks.

I am unfortunate in being blind, but I must have something by which I can make an honest living, and I appeal to my fellow voters of Craven County to come to my assistance, and help me make a living and educate my boy. I thank you all in advance for any assistance you may render me. Remember that one of the greatest U. S. Senators of today is a blind man.

Yours truly,
 J. C. JOHNSON.

TO THE DEMOCRATIC VOTERS OF CRAVEN COUNTY.

I wish to announce my candidacy for Sheriff of Craven county, subject to the will of the people to be expressed at the Democratic primary on Tuesday, July 2nd, 1912. If elected I will discharge my duties faithfully.

Yours respectfully
 F. S. ERNUL.

TO THE DEMOCRATIC VOTERS OF CRAVEN COUNTY.

In response to the solicitation of many friends I have determined to again be a candidate before the party primary to be held July 2nd, next, for the office of Sheriff. I feel very grateful for past favors and hope that my administration of the Sheriff's office has your approval. If re-elected I promise to give you as faithful service in the future as I have in the past.

Your obedient servant,
 J. W. BIDDLE.

TO THE DEMOCRATIC VOTERS OF CRAVEN COUNTY.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Superior Court of Craven county, subject to the Democratic primary to be held July 2nd. If nominated and elected I pledge myself to discharge the duties of such office to the best of my ability.
