He is one of the Ocracoke county boys who has made good.

A Modest Youth.

[Communicated] It is almost a feeling of being deformed of its rights when a community is deprived of its pleasure by not knowing how one of its young students has succeeded away from home, at school. The family may know, and a few intimates, but when a boy comes back home with a breastplate of gold medals, it ought to be generally known.

There is a boy in New Bern whose modesty is almost unnatural, in not allowing others to know of his success, and to shower congratulations upon his family over the position he has won at school. It is no slight thing to win five medals in a school of 65 boys, all the prizes he could win as a first year student.

Listen: The Latin medal, the English medal, the Science medal, the mathematics medal and the general scholarship medal were all carried off last May by a New Bern boy, and not a line in either paper, because the modesty of the boy shrinks at any notice even of the fact that he stood without a peer among his fellow students in his studies, and at the same time was voted the best loved boy in school in whose honors all his mates took pride and applauded without envy.

And he bore himself so well, and was ever found on the side of right and purity and truth, that the principal of the school wants to utilize his talents and secure his influence next session as a tutor in certain branches as he pursues a post graduate course and our modest young townsman is not yet seventeen years old. If he will not let us give him a cheer surely we feel warranted in expressing our pleasure and pride in her boy to the mother of George Slover.

5:00 p. m. and 8:00 p. m. entertainments at The Athens.

FARMER AND THE MIDDLEMAN President Worst of North Dakota Agricultural College, Talks on Emancipation of Agriculture.

President J. H. Worst, of the North Dakota agricultural college, sees some discontent up his way in the expense attached to marketing the farmers' crops. In an address on the emancipation of agriculture, delivered to the graduating class on the occasion of the seventeenth annual commencement, his striking conclusion is that the farmer must get rid of the middleman. He said:

From its strategic position, agriculture could easily regulate the distribution of the chief forms of wealth it produces, or at least have a voice in the organization of the machinery necessary for distributing it among the consumers of the country. Moreover, the financial gain that would thus reward the producer would not be the only nor yet the chief advantage that would accrue. The effect upon the country itself would be most salutary. Higher education would be directed less toward the desire for making of the other fellow. Agriculture would also acquire the habit of attending more largely to its own business affairs. The consumer meanwhile would more nearly secure his goods at prices determined by the law of supply and demand.

Under the present regime, however, the farmer can neither regulate the price of what he has to sell or buy. He is completely at the mercy of those whom he supports. Most countries of Europe have been forced long since by sheer necessity to dispense with all but necessary middlemen. The time is not far distant, moreover, in this country when agricultural co-operation will become a necessity, for in business as in nature, the organization invariably arises upon and assumes the unorganized elements. Organized capital exacts tribute from productive labor with the same ease and freedom with which the wheat plant captures millions of atoms of earth and air and weaves them into its own structure, without so much as by your leave. Hence, agriculture, unorganized and unco-operative, must inevitably become the common prey of organized forces. From this condition there can be no escape.

BOYD TALKS FACTS.

The recent fatal railroad wrecks where in many persons were killed and others injured; the numerous, recent automobile casualties throughout the country in which many have been killed. (In 1912 recent automobile accidents 59 people were killed and 225 injured;) the crowded condition of our streets and the near inauguration of the street car line, to say nothing of everyday hazards lurking everywhere, are suggestive of accident insurance. We've got it in every desirable form at small cost.

Too Soon. The cave-man was gifted with prophetic vision, and when he perceived how hideously hairy he was, a discontent took possession of him. "If automobiles were only invented," he muttered bitterly, "I should be setting the style in winter coats." That sense of having been born too soon, when has it not served to rob men of their patience.—Puck.
