Singularly Alike.

The two Clevelanders on the back seat were talking literature. "I'm reading Ruskin all over again," said one. "It's meaty stuff after so much modern frivol." "Ruskin," said the other man, "always reminds me of Artemus Ward." "What's that? Artemus Ward? Impossible!" "Not at all. The titles of Ruskin's books and Ward's lectures never have anything to do with the contents."

Inexpensive Job.

"Do you see that man? Only yesterday he cleaned out a bank." "Why didn't they arrest him?" "What for? He's a very conscientious janitor."

Summer Guests

"The Pikes live a quarter of a mile down the road from me," said the girl who owned a summer cottage. "They have one of those simple little places of about twenty acres, with its own bathing beach and melon patch and gold-plated chicken yard and manicured cows and tomatoes worth $1 a piece. If a fallen twig six inches long is allowed to remain on the lawn the head gardener gets into a lot of trouble. One slug discovered on the rose bushes causes his discharge."

"The Pikes are especially proud of their kitchen garden, where they raise things that cost them ten times what they would pay for the same things in the grocery store. But the things the Pikes raise are worth the price. You really wouldn't believe their strawberries if you saw one suddenly with no preparation. As for the green peas—actually, those peas should be framed and hung on the wall just to be looked at."

"Well, the Pikes had a guest over Sunday, a large, beefy, important gentleman who had made his money late in life and who enjoys entering electric lighted cafes and tipping the waiter with a $5 bill. They thought they would give him a genuine treat, something he did not get every day, a dish that would make him exclaim joyously. So they had the first picking of June peas with the broiled chicken for dinner."

"The guest did not observe the breathless hush with which the peas were offered him, but he helped himself bountifully and devoured them in a workmanlike manner, while his hosts watched him expectantly. Nothing happened."

"Mr. Pike coughed. 'Er—' he began. 'The peas—pretty good, eh? Right from our own garden!'"

"The beefy gentleman dimly felt that something was expected from him. 'Oh, yes,' he said. 'To be sure—the peas. They're good, aren't they? Almost as good as the French canned peas they serve at hotels!'"

"Not having a garden, I do not get my feelings outraged in just the same manner as did the Pikes—but there are times. There was the occasion of the peach tree, for instance."

"Nobody who has not witnessed the sitting out in a sunny place of four walking sticks with funny green knobs on them and has not nursed and cherished them for three seasons and spat out spiders and ants and defied curly leaf and the yellow blight and coddled and fussed over them can understand what it means to arrive in the spring and find six or seven fuzzy, unmistakable peaches on each of those trees. It is as exciting a moment as that when you find a baby has cut a tooth! I would go out a dozen times a day just to assure myself that the peaches were all there and no insect was marrying them and to tell them how nice it was of them actually to grow before my very eyes on my own trees! That was the summer I asked Pearl over to visit me."

"Pearl is a fascinating young woman, but you will understand her limitations when I say that she would rather walk down State street than through the woods and that she turns pale at the sight of a spider. I believe she regarded the country with bored surprise and came over because she felt sorry for me in my exile. The only time Pearl stepped off the porch when she did not have to I found her out by the peach trees."

"There was a big fat squirrel on the rail fence just now," she said, "eating something so busily that he wouldn't budge even when I threw things at him. There weren't any stones, so I used those hard green things on these trees—they were just right to throw—and he jumped so when the last one hit him." "I did to keep from doing violence to Pearl."

"The Vannecks are jolly people and I anticipated their coming with special pleasure. I showed them the place—it takes about five minutes to exhaust the rights of my estate—and with a burst of pride dilated on the fact that even in these wilds there are comforts and that I have a bathroom, with running water. Of course, I added, it's cold water, but then just consider having any kind right in the house!"

"Mr. Vanneck leaned weakly against a wall. 'Do you mean to say, he got out tragically, 'that you don't have hot water here? No hot water?'"

"You heat it on the alcohol lamp to abate," I explained. "And for a hot bath we heat it on the kitchen stove and carry it in, but the water is so soft that I prefer the cold tub."

"Mr. Vanneck clapped his hand to his brow and went and sat in a corner and moped over the awful calamity of no unlimited hot water. All the time they were here his wife and I spent most of it stoking the kitchen stove so that if Vanneck took a sudden fancy for a hot bath there would be plenty of water."

"The thermometer stood above 90 and every one was going around with perspiration dripping from the end of his nose seeking coolness, but whenever I encountered Vanneck's resigned, reproachful eye I felt that I had blighted his comfort. Mrs. Vanneck tried to apologize. She said he was so dependent on the ordinary comforts of life and that one had to humor him."

HOW TO RESIST.

Chronic Coughs and Colds. Strong vigorous men and women hardly ever catch cold; it's only when the system is run down and vitality low that colds and coughs get a foothold.

Now isn't it reasonable that the right way to cure a cough is to build up your run down condition again?

Mrs. Olivia Parham of East Durham, N. C., says: "I took Vinol for a chronic cough which had lasted two years and the cough not only disappeared, but it built my strength as well."

The reason Vinol is so efficacious in such cases is because it contains in a delicious concentrated form all the medicinal curative elements of cod liver oil, with tonic, blood building iron added.

Chronic coughs and colds yield to Vinol because it builds up the weakened, run-down system.

You can get your money back any time if Vinol does not do all we say. F. S. Duffy, Druggist, New Bern, N. C. (Advertisement)

Commercial Uses Have Nearly Exterminated the Tiniest of Feathered Creatures.

Our continent has a monopoly of humming birds, the gems of the feathered creation. Of these there are said to be as many as four hundred species, most of which confine themselves to the tropical regions.

Only eighteen varieties live farther north than Mexico. It is generally thought that humming birds live upon honey. This, however, is a mistake. They do obtain and devour honey, it is true, but most of their food consists of the small insects which inhabit certain flowers.

Humming birds are so small that when they are captured for commercial purposes it is impossible to use even the smallest shot for fear of injuring their skins. They are therefore stunned with a drop of water from a blowgun or syringe, and fall into a net, when they are quickly poisoned.

Humming birds vary in size from those half as large as a sparrow to those about the size of a bee. Their flight is so swift that they can be well seen only when poised above a flower. The little creatures bid fair to be exterminated on account of the senseless and cruel fashion of using them as trimming for women's hats.—Ave Maria.

Pompeian Venus is Unearthed.

One of the latest and most interesting things uncovered during the new excavations at Pompeii under the direction of Professor Spinazzola, is a fresco which is regarded as the best which has yet been found. It is very beautiful, and in a perfect state of preservation. It was one of the ornaments of the facade of a house situated in the main public thoroughfare, of which the roof was in an almost intact condition. It represents the Pompeian Venus standing erect, crowned with a diadem, in the midst of flying Cupids, on a chariot drawn by four Indian elephants. Seen from the front, the representation of these animals is strikingly realistic. The archaeological value of the fresco is extremely great, for the colors are very fresh and harmonious.

No Maltese Cats in Malta.

James Oliver Laing, American consul at Malta, informs the state department that many Americans have asked him to give names of breeders of pure blood Maltese terriers and cats. He says there are a few so-called Maltese terriers in Malta and they are not of pure blood. The puppies which the street hawkers offer for sale to tourists are more or less mongrel, with a strain of the old breed. Maltese cats do not exist in Malta, at least not one of the color called Maltese in the United States, has been seen there.
