Their Broken Hearts

She hung on his arm as they strolled slowly down the street. A hurdy-gurdy was playing desperately in the avenue, but they did not hear it. A touring car missed them at a crossing by an inch and they never knew it. Other persons using the sidewalk got out of their way instinctively because they were not seen and had they not taken precautions they would have been walked over by the oblivious couple.

"It breaks me all up," the young man repeated, mournfully. "To think of your going away for the whole long summer and I can't go, too! Why, you'll have forgotten that I'm on earth by the time you come back!"

"George!" the young woman cried in accents which mingled reproach and woe. "How can you! If you knew how unhappy it makes me to have you doubt me!"

"It isn't that," said the young man. "I don't doubt you! I know you are as true as I am myself! But you can't help circumstances, and it is only natural that with a lot of those Willie boys hanging around you whose fathers have enough money to choke 'em you should forget me! I can't be at your call all day with touring cars and motor boats to amuse you and they can't! I don't blame you, Constantia, not at all! I—"

"I shall, cry, right out here on the street, if you talk that way!" declared the young woman in anguished tones.

"I don't see what has got into you, George!" she went on. "As though anybody could ever take your place, no matter if he had a dozen boats and touring cars! It just shows that you don't trust me! I shall be as lonesome as you and I shall think of you all the time!"

"Will you, really?" he asked. "But I'm not selfish enough to want to spoil your good times—"

"Good times!" she repeated, bitterly. "As though I could have any good times without you! It's going to be perfectly horrid. I don't see why, just because my family have a summer home and want to go to it, I should be dragged along when I'd be so much happier here in town where I could see you! There will be nothing for me to do and you'll have everything here."

"Think of all the other girls you'll see—talk about my forgetting you! Why, George, you'll be so busy running around with half a dozen others that you won't remember my name or the color of my eyes! I guess I know men and you're like all the rest. I used to think you were different, but somehow I see things more clearly tonight and I know—"

"Constantia," interrupted the young man, firmly, "you don't know what you are saying. Since I've known you I can't tell whether there is another girl on earth or not! I simply don't see them! You haven't any idea of the depth of my affection for you when you think things like those you have just been saying! Tell me that you don't mean them!"

"I'd be perfectly miserable if I honestly believed them," she admitted. "I guess I just said them so I could hear you deny them. You're sure you won't forget me, George?"

"Forget you?" he repeated, tremulously. "You are part of my every thought! I shall think of you every evening when I wander about all alone—"

"It sounds so sad," she broke in. "I'll be just like that, too. I'll sit and look at the lake and imagine that you are with me and then it won't seem so bad when I watch the other girls and men having good times at the dances and parties. I must go in now, dear. Good night!"

"Good night, dearest," said the young man. "I shall count the hours that you'll still be in town." As the young woman entered her own house the telephone bell rang and she answered. "Oh, is that you, Jessie?" she cried. "Yes, we're going to the lake next week. I'm so glad you're going, too. Your cousin will be with you part of the summer? West Point, you say? I am crazy to meet him! I simply love dark eyes! Oh, maybe he won't like me at all—you're such a flatterer. Indeed, I will try to give him a good time—can't you bring him around to call before we leave town? Bring him to dinner. I can hardly wait till he comes!"

A few blocks away the young man paused to light a cigar and then he happened to glance at a girl going by. He dropped the match and it burned his shoes as he stared after her.

"There's the little peach that's visiting the Uptams!" he told himself. "She's a corker! Guess I'll float around and get introduced—I can't miss any chance like that this summer!"—Chicago Daily News.

BOYD TALKS FACTS.

The UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, which is forty five years old and holds the world's record for LARGE DIVIDENDS and LOW COST, GOOD LIFE insurance—the dividends in many instances EXCEEDING the premiums—is the LARGEST LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD for its age. What is the reason? It's this way. You know the points of a successful life insurance company are its revenue from invested resources, low death rate and economy in management. Right here is the secret. The Union Central's average interest rate earned for 20 years, according to the Spectator Co., accepted statisticians, is 6.52 per cent. nearly 1 1-4 percent. more than any company in the world; its death rate, due to exclusive selection of risks is far below the average, while its management for economy and sound business principals is world renowned. These advantages possessed after long years of successful operation have created a model life insurance company absolutely worthy the confidence and consideration of all intelligent men who are desirous of protecting their family or estate, and if you want the best, see me and get the best. W. G. BOYD, Agent.
