The Eccentric Artist Had a Method
That Was All His Own.
In "Memories of James McNeill Whistler," by Thomas R. Way, the author allows us a glance at the artist's methods during his residence at the white house in Tite street, built from the designs of his friend, E. W.
Godwin, the architect.
"The studio was surprisingly different from the room he previously used in Lindsay row, and entirely unlike the studios usually occupied by other artists. I remember a long, not very lofty room, very light, with windows along one side; his canvas beside his model at one end and at the other, near the table which he used as a palette, an old Georgian looking glass, so arranged that he could readily see his canvas and model reflected in it. Those who used such a mirror (as he did constantly) will know that it is the most merciless of critics.
"I marveled then at his extraordinary activity, as he darted backward and forward to look at both painting and model from his point of view at the extreme end of the long studio. He always used brushes of large size with very long handles, three feet in length, and held them from the end with his arm stretched to its full extent. Each touch was laid on with great firmness, and his physical strength enabled him to do without the assistance of a maulstick, while the distance at which he stood from the canvas allowed him to have the whole of a large picture in sight and so judge the correct drawing of each touch."

BATTLEFIELD BRAVERY.

An Instance of Cool Courage in Face of imminent Danger.
Perhaps few stories of battles so thoroughly illustrate cool bravery in the face of real danger as the little incident at a reconnaissance before the battle of Ulundi, of which Lord William Beresford was the hero.
The British were almost led into a terrible trap and discovered the danger only just in time. They turned to retreat, and the Zulus poured in a volley which brought down the gray horse of a mounted infantryman. His rider fell headforemost. The rest thought both man and horse were killed at first, but the former soon struggled to his feet, with his face covered with blood and dazed with his fall.
Lord William Beresford, seeing what had happened, pulled up and, to the face of advancing hosts of yelling savages within easy range, quietly trotted back and told the man to mount behind him.
With a cool courage scarcely second to Lord William's, the man refused, noble fellow that he was, preferring the certain sacrifice of his own life to the probability of destroying his preserver.
The reply was admirable, terse and telling. The savages swarmed closer and closer; bullets rattled around them. The two who lingered were almost within reach of the assegais, and Lord William said:
"Get up or I'll punch your head!" The man obeyed, and rescuer and rescued escaped.—Pearson's Weekly.

Why Blackie Wore the Plaid.
Professor Blackie frequently stayed at Dr. Donald Macleod's house in Glasgow. One night, said the doctor, we were sitting up together. Blackie said in his brusque way, "Whatever other faults I have, I am free from vanity." An incredulous smile on my face roused him. "You don't believe that. Give me an instance." Being thus challenged, I said, "Why do you walk about flourishing a plaid continually?" "I'll give you the history of that, sir. When I was a poor man and when my wife and I had our difficulties she one day drew my attention to the threadbare character of my surcoat and asked me to order a new one. I told her I could not afford it just then, when she went, like a noble woman, and put her own plaid shawl on my shoulders, and I have worn a plaid ever since in memory of her loving deed."

Man Who Beheaded Charles I.
The mysterious masked man who beheaded Charles I. remains the British analogue for the Man With the Iron Mask. Lilly, the lying astrologer, denounced Cornet Joyce at the restoration, but Joyce on the fatal 30th of January was not in favor with Cromwell. The parish register of Whitechapel records the burial in 1649 of Richard Brandon, the common hangman, and opposite the entry a contemporary hand wrote that "he cut off the head of Charles the First." Brandon himself asserted that "they made him do it for £30," with which he drank himself to death.—Dundee Advertiser.

Sadly Lacking.
"Did young Charlie Goldie call on you last night?" "Yes. He calls almost every night." "That sounds serious. What sort of young man is he—pretty intelligent?" "Intelligent! Why, sir, he doesn't know enough to embrace an opportunity."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How Could She?
Student—I told you last night to wake me at 7 this morning. Why the decks didn't you do so? Landlady—Well, sir, at 7 o'clock you hadn't come home.—Pittsburgh Courier.

Rivals.
Lulu—You should get him to sign the pledge before you marry him. Babe—Why, he doesn't drink. Lulu—No, but he may be tempted to later.
Conduct is three-fourths of life.—Arnold.

Judge our Furniture
On its Merits

The reputation of a store is made and held through the quality of the goods it sells. We are proud of our reputation.
The distinctive character of our furniture, of our carpets and everything we sell, speaks volumes. It is our chief asset upon which we base our claim of superiority.
We would rather lose sales than have to resort to a sacrifice of quality in order to undersell. It's not our way of doing business.
You may depend upon everything you buy here, as being absolutely worth y and fully up to representation in every particular.
THAT'S THE SECRET OF THIS STORE'S SUCCESS.
