By the time the Farmer and Mechanic becomes ten years older the world will admit that the discovery of the insignificant cotton plant was an event of almost equal importance in the history of modern industries as the invention of the locomotive. Fifty years ago the life. plant was a mere weed. Forty years ago it became a valuable crop. Thirty years ago it became the King of American staples. Twenty years ago it changed the whole character of the American government by indirectly provoking a great civil war. Ten years ago it lifted the South out of the ruins of reconstruction. Eight years ago it began to expand its kingdom by revealing its unsuspected capabilities. Six years ago the virtues of cotton seed oil cake for fattaning cattle aroused the interest of the world. Five years ago the uson of cotton seed oil began to gain general recognition.
