Bits and Tidbits. Nobody ever heard of and absconding editor. The reason is obvious.—Commercial Advertiser.

A Newark (Ohio) editor is known to wear rubber coats and half boots. Is this a journalistic feat?—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

We increased our circulation considerably this morning—had a foot race with a Billy goat.—Arkansas Traveler.

President Arthur has not written any poetry since 1881. This will help him out with the press if he should want to run again in 1884.—St. Louis.

The irate rural subscriber who went into the editor's office to see about something that appeared in the paper felt very much put out about five minutes afterwards.—The Judge.

The Wheeling Register assures us "that" there is no valid reason why a man should not live a hundred years. True enough. It is the invalid reasons which reduce the average longevity.

A Western paper tells of a hen that committed suicide. This merely proves the capacity that Western papers possess for lying about anything that has a crop connected with it.—New York Commercial.

"When will the editor be in?" said the office boy at Colorado newspaper office. "Well, I don't know for sure; not till they think of quit wanting to lynch him for that editorial published yesterday."—Boston Post.

A Kentuckian from Connecticut. A Kentuckian who went to the funeral of a friend asked the privilege saying a few words, which was granted. He talked eloquently for a few minutes, when, laying his trembling hand on the coffin, he observed that he was sorry to see that the deceased was baldheaded, which could easily have been avoided by the use of some of his hair restorer, and wound up by exhorting the mourners to try it.
