THE JOURNAL.

NEW BERNE, N. C., JUNE 23, 1888.

PETER MCGROCH, a Milwaukee and Chicago lard gambler, has failed for about one million of dollars. His failure involves no particular loss but his own. There is as much lard in the market as before the failure and the million lost by him in betting on the wrong side of the game is only transferred from his own pocket to the pockets of the more fortunate gamblers.

The London Bar proposes, and are making great preparations, to dine Mr. Judah P. Benjamin, the Confederate Secretary of State during the latter part of the war between the States. He has recently retired from the Bar on account of heart disease, resulting from overwork during his service in the Confederate Cabinet. Since his admission to the English Bar, Mr. Benjamin's practice has been worth $70,000 a year.

The Deceased Wife's Sister bill in the English House of Lords called on the largest vote in recent times. The passage of the second reading was due mainly to Lord Dalhousie's clever and energetic management. It has been followed by an explosion of clerical fury in the church papers, which are gloomily foreboding social disorders of the worst kind. The collection of some very effective American testimony provoked a bitter attack on America by Lord Cairns, who even holds the United States responsible for polygamy in Utah.

THE ISSUE.

The papers are busily engaged in discussing what shall be the issue for 1884. Some of the ablest and leading journals, such as the Courier Journal and Wilmington Star, are willing to make the leading issue, "tariff reform," while others are anxious to fight it out on the line of the old fraud, and the rascalities of the Republican party. We cannot see what the party has to hope for but defeat by conducting another campaign upon the latter issue. For sixteen years they have fought on this line and been defeated. Can they show up the rascals and present to the people the corruption of the Republican party in any stronger light now than they did four, eight or twelve years ago? We think not. The fresher a crime is upon the memories of the people the more impulsive they are to act upon it. When the Democratic party starts back to gather up the many crimes perpetrated upon the liberties of the people and the many robberies that have been committed on the public treasury by the Republican party, the Republicans will go back and hold the Democrats responsible for the war, the North will be arrayed against the South and the soldiery of the North will be advised to "vote as they shot," and the Democratic party will meet with its usual fate.

Give us a fair, square issue upon "tariff reform," the old cry of corruption and fraud is getting stale, besides it is a two-edged sword.

If "tariff reform" is to be the issue the Star and Courier Journal are right in opposing the election of a Protectionist as speaker of the next House of Representatives, which will be but the skirmish that will precede the great battle of 1884.

THAT BAD BOY.

"There! you drop that," said the grocery man to the bad boy, as he came lurching in the store and began to fumble around a box of strawberries. "I never have kicked at your codfish, and cheese, herrings and apples, but there has got to be a dividing line somewhere, and I make it at strawberries at six shillings a box, only two layers in a box. I only bought one box, hoping a plumber or gas man would come along and buy it, and by gum every body that has been in sampled a strawberry out of that box, shivered as though it was sour, and gone off without asking the price." And the grocery man looked mad, took a hatchet, and knocked in the head of a barrel of apples, and said: "There help yourself to dried apples."

"O, I don't want your strawberries or dried apples," said the boy as he leaned against a show-case, and looked at a bar of red, transparent soap. "I was only trying to fool you. Say, that bar of soap is old enough to vote. I remember seeing it in the show-case when I was about a year old, and pa came in here with me and held me up to the show case to look at a tin tobacco box and that round zinc looking glass and the yellow wooden pocket comb; and the soap looks just the same, only a little faded. If you wash yourself once in a while, your soap wouldn't dry up on your hands." And the boy sat down in a chair without any back, feeling that he was even with the grocery man.

"You never mind the soap. It is paid for; and that is more than your father can say for the soap he has used in his house for the past month, said the grocery man, as he split up a box to kindle the fire."

"But we won't quarrel. What was it I heard about a band serenading your father and his inviting them to lunch?"

"Don't let that get out, or pa will kill me dead. It was a joke. One of these Bohemian bands that goes about playing tunes for pennies, was over on the next street, and I told pa I guessed some of his friends who had heard that we had a baby at the house, had hired a band and was coming in a few minutes to serenade him, and he better prepare to make a speech. Pa is proud of being a father at his age, and he thought it was no more than right for the neighbors to serenade him, and he went to loading himself for a speech in the library, and me and my chum went out and told the leader of the band there was a family up there that wanted to have some music, and they didn't care for expenses, so they quit blowing where they were and come along. None of them could understand English except the leader, and he only understood enough to take a drink when invited. My chum steered the band up to our house and I got them to play 'Babies on our block,' and I stopped all the men who were going home and told them to wait a minute and they would see some fun, so when the band got through the second tune, and the Prussians were emptying their beer out of their horns, and pa stepped out on the porch, there was a hundred people in front of the house. You'd a dived to see pa when he put his hand in the breast of his coat, and struck an attitude. He looked like a congressman or a tramp. The band was scared, cause they thought he was mad, and some of them was going to run, thinking he was going to throw brick houses at them but me and the leader stopped 'em. Then pa sailed in. He commenced, Fellow-Citizens, and then he went away back to Adam and Eve, and worked up to the present day, giving a history of the notable people who had acquired children, and kept the crowd interested. I fell sorry for pa, cause I knew how he would feel when he came to find out that he had been sold. The Bohemians in the band that couldn't understand English, they looked at each other, and wondered what it was all about, and finally wound up by stating that it was every citizen's duty to own children of his own, and then he invited the crowd in to take some refreshments. Well, you ought to have seen the band come in the house. They fall over each other getting in, and the crowd went home, leaving pa and my chum and me and the band. Kat! Well, I should smile! They just reached for things, and talked Bohemian. Drink! O, no! I guess they didn't pour it down. Pa opened a dozen bottles of champagne, and they fairly bathed in it, as though they had a fire. Pa tried to talk to them about the baby, but they couldn't understand English; and finally they got full, and started out, and the leader asked pa for ten dollars, and that broke him up. Pa told the leader he supposed the gentlemen who had got up the serenade paid for the music; and the leader pointed to me and said I was the gentleman that got it up. Pa paid him, but he had a wicked look in his eyes, and me and my chum lit out; and the Bohemians came down the street, billa full, with their horns on their arms, and they were talking Bohemian for all that was out. They stopped in front of a vacant house and began to play, but you couldn't tell what it was then, and then a policeman came along and drove them home. I guess I will sleep in the ivory stable tonight, cause pa is awful unreasonable when anything costs him ten dollars besides the champagne."

"Well, you have made a pretty mess of it!" said the grocery man. "It's a wonder your pa does not kill you."

CANNING FRUITS, ETC.

Report of Committee of Laurel, Del., Grange, in Milford Chronicle.

We the undersigned Committee having been appointed on Canned Fruits, beg leave to make the following suggestions:

There are three things absolutely necessary to insure success: 1st, good fruit; 2d, good cans; 3d, management of canning.

To obtain the first, get trees from reliable nurserymen and cultivate carefully. For the second, glass cans with tops lined with porcelain are the best, and by far the cheapest in the end; there is but little danger of breaking if handled carefully. The temperature should be equal between jar and fruit, or as near to it as is possible. Cans may be broken as soon by overheating and putting the fruit in the jars too hot, as by not heating enough. Fill the jars one-third full with warm water, shake vigorously and fill quickly with hot boiling fruit; another good way is to place the cans filled with fruit and syrup in a vessel with slats across the bottom and cold water sufficient to come nearly to the top of the can, boil until the fruit is done; in this way perfection can be reached by retaining the full flavor, color and form of the fruit. One thing we have noticed with persons not thoroughly acquainted with the business, is to be careless about the cans, thinking a little space will do no harm. But a little air in ever so small a space will produce mold, thereby injuring the taste of the fruit; it may be pronounced good, but compared to a well filled jar the difference will be readily discovered; one is fresh and the other is not; the least bit of trouble would have saved it and made it perfectly healthy and palatable.

In selecting cans be sure to select a pattern that is easily closed, excluding all air. Persons differ greatly about the amount of sugar to be used, small fruit will keep equally as well without sugar, but pears, peaches, and quinces require a syrup suitable to taste. Berries should not be too ripe, but canned as soon as possible after picking, or before fermentation commences. All imperfect ones should be taken out. Currants and cherries should be fully ripe, it is a saving of jars to use as little water as possible in cooking, say about one pint to the gallon of fruit. It is necessary to cook tomatoes and gooseberries down to one-half or one-third. Pears should be nearly ripe to be in proper condition, peaches fully ripe, but not soft, and carefully peeled. By leaving a few of the pits in, you will have a delicious flavor of the almond. Grapes should be picked singly from the bunch, press out the pulp in one vessel, put the skins in another; boil the pulp a few minutes, then pass through a colander to separate from the seed, boil the skins in pure water until tender, then put in the strained pulp to which add one-fourth pound of sugar to a half pound of fruit; bring to a boil, and can. Every person will pronounce this excellent who gets the opportunity to taste; we only give our opinion in a small way.

In the large canning business where the manager understands the business thoroughly, he can preserve many things we know nothing about. Corn we think excellent, but have had no experience in canning; hope our Sisters will give us a recipe. Poultry, in fact meats of all kinds, are being canned in our State and shipped in large quantities to the Northern cities and even to Europe.

In conclusion, we will say as you put your fruit in the can, so it will come out again, and you need not expect rich delicious apple sauce to come from cans into which you put small, hard, knotty, sour apples; and canning peaches that are flat and insipid do not add anything to their flavor, but they will retain the flat, insipid taste if left for years.

AMELIA A. BACON,
Chairman of Committee.

A New York Justice has sent a woman to Blackwell's Island for six months because she shook her fist at him. A Justice of the Peace has big advantages, compared to a married man.

A Springfield, Ill., maiden threw a bucket of water on a member of the Legislature who had winked at her. No one who has heard of the torments that the sight of water gives an Illinois legislator will doubt that the punishment in this case was fully up to the enormity of the crime.

Notice to Truckers.

In order to insure making arrangements at Goldsboro, it is imperative necessary that the Train should leave New Bern promptly at FOUR o'clock, p. m.

Truckers are requested, therefore, to have their Truck at the Depot not later than FIFTEEN MINUTES TO FOUR.

All Truck arriving after that time will be forwarded the next day.
