The fish interest, the corn interest and the fertilizer interest are all represented, and these constitute the bulk of the freights that are shipped Westward. The trucking interest is also represented.

The only fault we have to find of the proposition is that they don't offer enough. We wish to see some hope of the counties who have been taxed heavily for the building of the road to realize something for the stock they own for the erection of the new buildings in it. The inspiration of the movement is not altogether to beat down freights on other lines, but to make money and Baltimore on yesterday morning with a to protect the interest of the people along the line. This is our conception of the inspiration, though we may be mistaken.

New Berne is losing thousands of dollars to her trade every year for want of the proper means of crossing Neuse River at this point; and the inconvenience, loss of time and expense of prossing by the present method of Sail boats, designed only for ferrying persons and light packages, amounts to a large sum in the aggregate to the country people.

True, a good writer, who is able to discuss leading topics, can give tone to a paper and do much towards shaping public opinion in regard to public matters; but nine-tenths of the people take a newspaper to get the news, the price of cotton, bacon, eggs and fox hides. We trust our able contemporary will not understand us in what we have said as dictating how to run a paper these are only our views. He may "lag superfluous on the stage," or be so regarded by the envious, and still have out little to do with the world, ceasing to be a factor therein. This is more apt to be the case now than formerly. The progress of the age does not mean necessarily progress in education, in cultivation, in knowledge, in thorough trainwisit to their relatives and friends at that place.

Graham and Abraham Venable were the chief men there was patient toil and patient waiting. Learn-ing was regarded as essential to the highest success. Statesmanship was only acquired after severe labor and large observation. Men were content to accumulate great stores of informa-tion to be utilized afterwards. There were not ready-made great jurists and statesmen and editors and legislators in those days. There were no systems then discovered by which a great man was turned out after a few months of hurried close reading just as you have now "French Made Easy in Six Les-sons." The leading men were men of culture and mental power and of large resource. The best editors then were understood to be men of experience understood to be men of experience, of reading, of information—men who had studied the history of their own and other countries, and who had some knowledge of the past political parties and systems as well as some knowledge of the great public questions of their own day and time. But all this is reversed now. Education, learning, reading, information are at a positive discounts. A man needs nothing now For want of convenient methods of crossing teams and vehicles, and transporting freights, lands lying on the North side of the river are greatly depreciated in value, and the people over there are suffering more every year than the cost of buying and maintaining a first-class Steam Ferry-boat.
