THE JOURNAL.

H. S. HUNN, Editor. NEW BERNE, N. C., OCT. 16, 1888.

FRAUDS AND FOOLS.

The season for Fairs is now upon us, and it is usual about the time of these gatherings for us to have our full quota of swindlers, cheats and robberies perpetrated upon us.

The particular swindlers we have at present in our mind are the three card monte men, the thimble rigger and other devices of professional frauds who visit such places to ply their vocation...

The monte man is surely a fraud but not a fool; it is his profession and the mode of making money which he has adopted as the best for him to follow...

Now if innocent abigail will consider a while he will see that we are not harsh in setting him down as both fool and fraud.

No man ever gets trapped by these swindlers until they become a quasi swindler themselves, and no confidence man ever makes headway with his victim until the victim meets him half-way.

We remember an incident when a wealthy man was inveigled into a dangerous den of gamblers by the simple promise of a young man...

Besides all this the business of the city, entirely a local trade, is reviving and the shopkeepers are animated at the prospect of an accession of rich and extravagant customers.

Now we do not expect this timely hint to protect everybody in the State this fall from the fleeceer's shears...

thinkable rig to the fare bank, entitles them to the distinction we have assigned; and if so silly as to play and lose, say nothing about it...

We have said nothing about pickpockets as it is well known that none but an escaped lunatic would ever attempt so rash and profitless a job as picking the pocket of an editor...

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13, 1888.

The legislative city upon the banks of the Potomac, is again the center towards which wandering feet and eager thoughts are bending. At each successive season's rehabilitation of the National City...

The preliminary agitation which foretells the approach of the social season in Washington is very marked just now.

The Rip Van Winkle sleep of the summer is over, and the city re-awakens. The habits of Washington will observe various indications of this fact.
