Benedict Arnold's Descendants.

The sins of the fathers are not always visited upon their posterity, so that the visitation is apparent to the world. At least, this is the case with the descendants of Benedict Arnold.

Benedict Arnold had four sons, all of whom entered the British army as officers. Some of the sons of these sons also obtained commissions in the public service, the army, the navy, or the church, and several of them are still living.

The second son of the traitor, James R. Arnold, won great distinction in the army, and seems to have been a man of amiable and elevated character. He was a baby in arms when the family went to England, after the war, and, at twenty-three, was a lieutenant serving in Surinam.

There he performed the act which proved at once how deeply he felt his father's infamy, and how much of his father's better nature he had inherited.

Volunteers being called for to head a storming party in the assault of some almost impregnable forts, Lieut. Arnold offered his services, and said to the commanding general,—"I beg the privilege of guiding and leading this assault. You know the history of my father. No braver man than he ever lived, but he has been bitterly assailed for the affair of West Point. Give me a chance, I beg of you, to do what I can to redeem the name."

That shows what he thought of "the affair of West Point," and, also, what the British army thought of it. His honorable request was granted, and he fell, severely wounded, at the head of his troops. He recovered to enter upon a great career, ending with the rank of Lieutenant-General. For his gallantry on this occasion, the merchants and bankers of London presented him with a magnificent sword, which was shown to Mr. Isaac N. Arnold.

A grandson of Benedict, Capt. W. T. Arnold, fell in action at Sebastopol in 1855, and had distinguished mention in the despatches of his general, Lord Raglan. Another grandson is now a lieutenant in the British navy.

The present head of the family in England is Rev. Edward Gladwyn Arnold, also a grandson of Benedict, who is rector of Grant Masingham in the County of Norfolk. His wife is Lady Charlotte, a daughter of the Marquis of Cholmondeley, known in America from the singular difference between the spelling and the pronunciation of his name. It is pronounced Chumby.

This clergyman, of whom nothing but good is spoken, preserves the papers of his grandfather, and gave his American visitor a letter written by Sir Henry Clinton to him in 1772, in which Sir Henry declares that, in surrendering West Point, Benedict Arnold stipulated for no reward. Sir Henry wrote,—"You never gave me reason to suppose you expected anything more than an indemnification. I thought it an act of justice, as well as duty, to offer you six thousand pounds—not as an indemnification for all your losses, for they had not been ascertained, but I thought it was all I could give in that prudence with which I was obliged to temper liberality."

GENERAL NEWS.

The International Exhibition in Nice was opened on last Monday. Bradford Miller, Prohibition candidate, has been elected Mayor of Topeka, Kan.

Codfish have reappeared off Newburyport, Mass., since the Merrimack has been restocked with shad and alowives.

The Yuma Indians, on the Colorado, bury watermelons in the dry desert sand, and preserve them all winter, fresh and crisp.

A breastpin containing an Edison glow light, fed by a small waistcoat pocket battery, is sold for $9 at Nuremberg, Germany.

Reuben R. Springer, of Cincinnati, has bequeathed to the Cincinnati Art Museum his valuable art collection; also the pictures willed him by his niece, Mrs. Mills.

The London Telegraph expects to witness in a few months the birth of a new nation in the Southern seas to be brought about by the federation of the Australian colonies.

A wounded soldier who lives in Burlington, Iowa—the Gazette of that city tells the story—declines to draw any more pension money because he has recovered from his wounds.

Three thousand employees of the National Tube Works Company, at McKeesport, Pa., will accept the reduction of from 12 to 25 per cent announced to go into effect on Jan. 1st.

The colossal statue of John C. Calhoun—a correspondent in Rome writes to the Baltimore Sun—will be fifteen feet high, and, when set up in the city of Charleston, will be, with its pedestal, forty-five feet high. At the base of the granite resta will be seated life-size figures of Truth, Justice, and History.

The widow Hill, whose intended marriage to Bishop Warren of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been briefly announced by telegraph, owns the handsomest house in Denver and the largest ranch in Colorado. The wealth left her by her cattle-king husband three years ago is estimated at from $1,000,000 to $6,000,000. Bishop Simpson, of Philadelphia, will perform the ceremony on the 27th inst.

The London Times says that the continued depression in trade is a puzzle to the community. The revival of 1879 was but temporary, and merchants now complain that their profits have either disappeared altogether or are extremely small, while great industries are admittedly in distress, and nowhere is there real prosperity. But it is merely the speculative trade which is depressed. The hand to mouth trade is fully maintained. The chief cause of the lengthened depression, the writer thinks, is to be found in the series of bad harvests.

Sheep-raising is shorn of its romance by a writer in the Chicago Times, who, after citing the glittering figures of the railroad pamphlets, asserts that many imported sheep husbandmen of the prairies have either sold or given away their sheep, and returned to their old homes in the East. They learned that it required the closest attention and the strictest care to produce a half of the profits that they had read of, and that only experienced men could find large dividends in the business. The old sheep-raisers know that plenty of good food and proper protection from storms are indispensable to success.

At the last census the natives of Ireland who were present in England and Wales numbered 562,374, being in the proportion of 21.65 to 1,000 of the entire population. The number is not an increasing quantity, for in 1861 it was 601,634, and at each census since it has fallen gradually. These figures show that relatively to the whole population of the country the Irish element is not formidable, but its unequal division over the country concentrates its strength in certain districts. In the agricultural counties the number of Irish is insignificant, but in the manufacturing and mining counties and boroughs they form a large proportion of the population. Thus, in Liverpool they are reckoned at 12.8 per cent, in Birkenhead 8.8, in St. Helen's 8.5, in Manchester 7.5, in Salford 7.4, in Lancashire 6.1, in Cumberland 5.6 per cent, and so on.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—The Madrid correspondent of the Times says he hears from good authority that Chinese troops took no part in the defence of Sontay, and that the French losses in the recent battle there were much greater than was officially stated. Preparations for the defence of the Red River delta by the Chinese continue to be made on a large scale.

The Vienna correspondent of the Standard says that he hears from a reliable source that France has determined to permit no interference with her programme in Tonquin and to enter into no negotiations whatever for peace with China until the French troops occupy Bao-Ninh.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—The Temps protests against the rumors of England's mediation between France and China, and adds: "France will always pay great attention to England's counsels, but must see her claims in Tonquin recognized. It is not for England to offer mediation if China does not ask for it."

Taming a Horse.

During Dr. Dio Lewis's "Gypsying in the Sierras," he became much interested in Prof. Tapp of San Francisco, who tamed wild and vicious horses, without violence or drugs. Showing the doctor a herd of wild horses from the mountains, the Professor said, "You may pick out any horse from this herd, and in two hours I will drive him before a buggy, and when going down hill will let the buggy loose on his heels, without the least risk." The doctor selected the largest horse, the leader of the herd. It took an hour to separate him from his fellows and drive him into the professor's private corral, which was about the size of a circus-ring, with sand six inches deep, and surrounded by a close plank fence, twelve feet high. Dr. Lewis seated himself in the circle above, where he saw what he thus describes:

Prof. Tapp entered the corral, holding in his right hand a whip with a short stock and a long, heavy lash.

In his left hand were a strong halter, minus the hitching-strap, two old potato-sacks, two straps, and a strong rope about thirty feet long.

Putting all these but the whip into a recess in the fence, the Professor turned towards the horse.

The animal was making frantic efforts to get away. The Professor watched his opportunity, and then the whip-cracker hit one of the horse's hind fetlocks.

The horse scampered from side to side, and the cracker again hit the fetlock. Within fifteen minutes this was repeated twenty to thirty times.

The horse learned the lesson this treatment was intended to convey—that there was only one safe place in the corral, and that was close by Prof. Tapp. There, there was no hurt, but a gentle, soothing voice. In half an hour, when the Professor ran across the corral, the horse would run after him. He had learned that it was dangerous to be more than ten feet away.

Prof. Tapp at length succeeded in touching the horse's head with his hand. He started away, but before he had taken three steps came back.

Within three-quarters of an hour the headstall was on. The horse was frightened and used his feet to remove it.

It was now easy to rub his head and neck. The end of the whipstock then tickled his side. The horse switched the spot with his tail, and the Professor caught the end of the long tail-hairs.

This frightened the animal; he forgot, and the whip-cracker called him back. The Professor then seized the tail, drew it towards him, tied into the end of the long hairs a strong cord, the other end of which was fastened to the iron ring of the headstall.

This drew the head and tail towards each other. The horse began to turn in a circle, and soon was turning as fast as he could. In a minute he fell, drunk with dizziness.

The Professor wound a potato-sack around each hind leg close to the hoof and fastened a short strap over it. There was an iron ring in each strap, and through both rings a rope was passed and tied upon itself, eighteen inches from the hind feet.

The long, loose end of the rope was passed between the horse's forelegs, through the ring of the headstall, and then tied into a heavy ring in the wall of the corral.

The cord connecting the head and tail was cut, and after a little time, the horse, still dizzy, rose slowly. When he found he was fastened he made a tremendous struggle. The Professor stood by the ring where the horse was tied.

The animal could not turn his head from side to side because of the rope which ran through the ring of the headstall.

He tried to back, and sat down in the sand. He sprang to his feet, again backed, and sat down in the sand.

"Pretty soon," said the Professor, "he will switch his tail from side to side; that means he gives up."

Within eight minutes, the horse moved his tail from side to side. "Now he's done," said the Professor.

He knelt down by the horse's hind legs, untied the rope, unbuckled the straps, walked behind him, put his hands upon the horse's hind legs, stuck his head between them, patted his head, and led him about the corral. I was obliged to leave, but I learned that he harnessed the horse and let the buggy strike his heels while going down hill.—Youth's Companion.
