regiments were on the right of the plank-road, and the 18th and 28th, on the left...

When I gave my orders to my regimental commanders, I informed them that we would occupy the front line for the purpose of making a night attack...

After I had formed my line from left to right, I rode back to the plank-road to report to Gen. Hill, and there, in the dark, I met with Gen. Jackson...

Gen. Hill, who ordered me to form my line for a night attack, which I have done, and I now wish to know whether I must advance or await further orders...

To this, Gen. Jackson, in an earnest tone and with a pushing gesture of the right hand in the direction of the enemy, replied, "Push right ahead, Lane," and rode forward...

This was the last time I ever saw my old V. M. I. Professor and Commanding Lieut.-Gen. I then rode to the right to put my line in motion...

Soon after this, our skirmishers on the right fired, as I afterwards learned from Col. Avery, at a mounted person who rode up to his line and called for Gen. Williams...

Gen. Pender then rode up, called me aside and advised me not to advance at all, as Gens. Jackson and Hill had both been wounded...

Lieut. Emack, with four men from the 7th regiment, was then sent to reconnoitre on our right, and they soon returned with Lieut. Col. Smith's Pennsylvania regiment...

While Lieut. Col. Smith was telling me that he did not think we could honorably capture his regiment, as he was in our lines "with a flag of truce," the enemy's artillery opened upon us again...

On going to the plank-road, I there learned from Col. Barry (then Major) of the 18th regiment, that he knew nothing of Generals Jackson and Hill having gone to the front...

In conversations afterwards, Gen. Hill always told me that he thought he was wounded by the enemy, and Gen. Jackson by the 18th regiment...

In all my intercourse with Gen. Hill, I never heard him, nor have I ever heard any one else censure the 18th regiment for firing under the circumstances...

After this unfortunate mistake, the whole of my command was moved to the right of the plank-road, and about midnight we repulsed two attacks made by Sickles...

Next morning, about sunrise, our brigade, under orders from Gen. Heth, made a direct front attack upon the enemy's breastworks...

was driven back before Ramour's brigade of North Carolinians could come to our assistance.

My entire loss at Chancellorsville was 72 officers and 837 men, making an aggregate of 909, a little more than one-third of the force carried in.

I have not seen the article of Mr. Capps to which you refer. I can say, however, that the statement that he, as ambulance driver, at Chancellorsville on the 2nd of May, 1863, took General "Stonewall" Jackson, wounded, to the rear...
