DO THE DEMOCRATS WANT TO CARRY NORTH CAROLINA IN 1884?

The question propounded here will doubtless be regarded by all intelligent readers as superfluous, because every voter without regard to party affiliation will answer in the affirmative. But the acts of parties, and of individuals, often antagonize their earnest wishes. The manner in which the Congressional Convention was called and held for the Second District is a case in point. This Convention was called at the extreme end of the District, thereby compelling the delegates from the other end to travel at least one hundred and forty miles. But the Democrats in this end of the district wished to be represented in that Convention; they appointed delegates; the delegates leave in time to take the first train from Goldsboro on the day of the Convention; the delegates at the other end of the district were apprised of the fact, so we are informed, that they were on the way, yet the Convention was organized, and the delegates arrived from this end of the district to find that they were on a fool's errand.

Now the manipulators of this Convention evidently intended to deprive the Democrats at this end of the district of their representation or to put them to unnecessary expense and time to attend. It is charged that there was trickery and jobbery in the Convention, and that the chairman, Mr. A. J. GALLOWAY, who resides out of the district, did not cause to be published in the schedule list of Conventions in the News and Observer, the organ of the party, the call for it.

Why this unfair discrimination against that part of the district lying on the line of the Atlantic and N. C. Railroad? It is said that an explanation is to be found in the fact that a certain well known gentleman who enjoys an easy berth in Washington City and who desired to go as delegate to Chicago, feared, and justly so, opposition from this end of the district. It is also intimated that this end of the line favored a Congressional candidate who had opposed him in Washington in the past and whose candidacy it was thought might strengthen him in any claims he might hereafter assert to the place which the aforesaid delegate so much enjoys in his adopted city of Washington. If this consideration led to the disfranchisement in the Convention of this end of the district it is a disgrace to the party. Some say "Oh, let it pass, if agitated it may hurt the party." From this view of the matter we beg to dissent. Such scandalous practices will ruin any party. To submit quietly to them is to encourage them and it is thus that corruption fastens itself upon a party. Denounce them and cure the evil before it has grown into a fatal disease.

The first ballot we ever cast was for good old JOHNATHAN WORTH, and since that time we have steadily supported the Democratic ticket, and expect to continue to support it until we are convinced that some other party will better administer the Government.

Perhaps, said I, you haven't better preserve the rights and liberties of the people. If the party endorses such conduct as that practiced at the Weldon Convention, then it does not want to succeed in this contest.

Our Memorial Day. The Pickett-Buchanan Camp of Confederate Veterans has requested the colors of our public buildings and the shipping to be hoisted today at half-mast; that stores and shops be closed; and that the bells of various churches shall be tolled when the column moves. We take it for granted these requests will be complied with, and that thus additional solemnity will be given to the occasion. The organization of the affair is now complete, and as far as the Veterans are concerned the duty of the living to the dead will be performed with tenderness, respect and decorum. But much depends on the spontaneous action of the citizens at large, and it is both hoped and expected that the popular action will be in accord with the sentiment of the occasion. As we have before said, flowers are difficult to obtain at this season, and, therefore, all contributions of these will be valuable to Major Pickett and his Committee. Let no one shrink from sending them because he or she cannot make a large contribution. Handfuls from various sources will amount to a great deal in the aggregate, and this fact should not be lost sight of by any one in sympathy with this noble undertaking, for surely it is a noble undertaking, for surely it is noble to do honor to the heroic dead who fell in the line of duty, or who have "crossed over the river (to) rest in the shade."—Norfolk Landmark.

FARMING WITH A WILL.

The first week in June I had finished planting, and so had my neighbors, and as there was a little breathing time before hoeing I engaged my neighbor Swain to plough up another piece for me. This had been last cropped evidently with corn, and left as the corn had grown. Though there were birches here and there growing over it, which had evidently started up since the corn was taken off, that were now fifteen or twenty feet high, the rows of corn as it had been well 'hilled up' were as distinct as when left fifteen or twenty years before. There was but about half an acre that had been thus cropped, but I managed by removing the stones and digging up the trees to get about two acres more ploughed. This I fertilized and harrowed and worked down very much better than I anticipated; then I fertilized again and then went over it again with the harrow. One-half of this I planted to yellow eyed beans, and the other half I drilled to fodder corn.

While I was doing this I heard a wagon stop at my gate and soon saw old Jew Cummings approaching, looking about him on every side.

'Mornin,' said he as he drew near. 'Good morning, sir,' said I in reply. 'I've heern 't we'd a sort o' crazy man come 'mongst us 'spectin' 't farmin' in some new fanged way. I 'spose you're the man.

'Well, I don't know whether I am the man or not. What is the name of the man you are looking after?' 'They tell me his name's Henshaw, and has bought the poor old Flint Hill farm, and this is it.'

'Then I confess to being the man you are looking for; but as to being crazy I am non-committal. Time will settle that.'

'Wal, I can't settle that now. If ye think o' gittin' rich on this here farm, or even gittin' a livin', ye haint far from bein' crazy or a fool.'

'Perhaps you've heard of the man who was going to cure the mule of his mulishness, and was soon seen pulling himself out of the ditch.'

There was no particular point to this repartee, but it showed the old conceit that his opinion wasn't worth a rush in my estimation. He was clearly a little thrown off his balance by my cool impudence, and suddenly amended his tone and manner.

'Wal,' he said, 'this here farm was considered one of the best in the town fifty or sixty years ago, but it fell to a poor, lazy, slack and shiftless fellow 'bout that time, and he just skinned the life out on it.'

'If he only went skin deep, as it is pretty clear he did, the heart may be sound yet,' said I. The old miser felt rather set back again, and hesitated for what to say next as I stood and looked him in the face with what he probably thought provoking coolness.

'What kind o' plantin' du ye call this?' he asked, as he ran his eye along the rows in which the kernels of corn lay rather loose together. 'I am drilling this corn in for corn fodder, as I expect to cut but little hay.'

'Ye gwine to keep yer critters in yer house? I don't see 's ye've got any barn.'

heard of the new way of wintering stock.'

'No; what is it?' 'Why, to provide each one with a great coat and mittens, and tie them to the trees.'

I really think the old fellow thought for a moment I was crazy for sure, as I kept a very sober face. His little keen grey eye scanned my face, and perhaps a twinkle in my eye or some lurking trace of humor may have convinced him that he was being fooled.

'Wal,' said he after a little, 'that air'd de 'bout's sensible as some o' the new fangled notions 'bout farmin', and this here notion o' farmin' with store stuff for manure, is one on 'em.'

'Did you ever try it?' I asked. 'Try it, no.'

'Do you know anybody that has?' 'No, nor don't want to.'

'How do you know then but what this 'store stuff' is better than manure?'

'How do I know? why't stands to reason?'

'Let us hear your reason. How is it that manure is useful in farming?'

'Reason! what fool don't know manure is good for farmin?'

'Yes, but what fool don't know that it was only by trying it that it was found to be good to make crops grow, and who but a fool will say nothing else can?'

I was too good natured for the old man to get provoked, though he evidently thought I was rather sharp with him.

'Wal,' he said rather thoughtfully, 'that air may be so, but I don't believe it.'

'We shall see something about it, as I have used no other fertilizer on this two acres which you say has been run to death. If I get good crops it must be owing to the 'store stuff' must it not?'

'Sartin, for this here land's too poor to raise white beans, for I've seen it tried.'

'Well, I have half of these two acres planted to yellow eyed beans, and half to corn, and we will see what the harvest will bring forth.'

'Wal, I'll call again then, and see what ye git. Good mornin', said he as he took his leave.

"Will the coming man smoke?" was asked by Prof. Fisk in his charming pamphlet. He says, moreover, that the rational way to use tobacco is through the pipe. All agree that only the best tobacco should be used. Which is the best? That to which Nature has contributed the most exquisite flavors. Blackwell's Bull Durham Smoking Tobacco fills the bill completely. Nearly two-thirds of all the tobacco grown on the Golden Tobacco belt of North Carolina goes into the manufacture of Blackwell's Bull Durham. They buy the pick of the entire section. Hence Blackwell's Bull Durham Smoking Tobacco is the best of that tobacco. Don't be deceived when you buy. The Durham Bull trademark is on every genuine package.
