A number of bills were passed.

Mr. Dixon rose to a question of personal privilege, and charged Speaker Holt (who had on one occasion moved to postpone until the 1st of May one of the bills on which Mr. Dixon had spent a great deal of labor) with laziness, dullness and stupidity, with many ad-jectives thrown in, and Speaker Holt very meekly confessed that he was dall and stupid, and that, he hoped, would be a sufficient apology for not appreciating the benefits that would accrue from the bill referred to, which he had moved to postpone in a motion often made in Congress and in legislative bodies.

Mr. Winborne rose to a question of personal privilege in regard to the report of the investigating committee submitted last night and said that his name was not sigued to the report and that it appeared in the account of the proceedings in the paper this morning by error. That after a fair and impartial consideration of the facts in the case, he was still of the opinion that the privileges of the House had been infringed, and that Mr. Pearson had been stricken for failing to explain the words spoken upon the floor, which were parlia-mentary and which the House had

As the pro-cession moved over the broad asphalt avenue to the Capitol, and afterward as the long column de-filed and stretched away fully four miles to the westward, accompanied by the harmonious din of 125 bands, of music, and the flaunting of national banners, the scene was grand and inspiring. But I must turn from the day to the man. The new occupant of the White House has had ample opportunity already to realize the strain to which he will be subjected during the next four years.
