Last Saturday night some thief took the key from the lock of the back door of W. B. Reid's grocery store in this place, intending, no doubt, to enter the store that night. But Mr. Reid, miss-ing the key, took measures to prevent it, and the next morning the key was found at the front door sill. On the same night some one took a window key from the eating-house of John Fields, and during the night entered the house, but did no serious damage that I have heard of.
