The Confederate Statue.

The statue for the Confederate monument arrived on the Shenandoah vesterday morning, direct from Italy, and was taken to Mr. Joe K. Willis' marble yard. It is the figure of a Confederate soldier on picket duty and is very lifelike in size and dress.

Death of a Former New Bernian.

A cablegram yesterday announced the death, in Paris, of Mr. Joseph H. Flanner.

Mr. Flanner was a native of New Berne and one of the most prosperous business men in Wilmington, his adopted home, before and during the war. He was largely interested in the operations of North Carolina in importing clothing for the soldiers, and was in Europe at the termination of hostilities and remained there up to his death. He has many relatives here, at Wilmington and in various parts of the country who will feel keenly their sad bereavement.

There is no abatement of Russia's ardor in preparing for war and the exultation of the Muscovite papers in reminding the British that their threats are futile suggests that their statesmen may attempt to push their advantage beyond the limits which Gladstone' cabinet even can tolerate. The Times says that the hopes of peace are not founded on the importation of any new element into England's treatings with Russia. It is simply known that in the Cabinet a "cold fit" has succeeded the "hot." "We do not learn," says the Times, "that any definite proposals offering a new ground for agreement have been presented or accepted by either side. Therefore it would be madness for the government to suspend its activity in preparing for war.'
