Chats of the Affairs at Home.

[From Southern Cultivator.]

I was thinking about the odds and ends of time; how they may be utilized; not the days nor the hours but the minutes. It is wonderful what a habitual use of these scraps may accomplish. There sits my good old mother knitting, for it is all she can do now, and while she talks and listens, her needles are crossing the stitches and every day or two there is another pair of socks or stockings for some of the grandchildren, and they are better than any that comes from the stores. And there sits my wife with her day's work done, her sewing and patching and darning and cleaning up and helping nurse the grandchildren, and hearing Carl and Jessie say their lessons, and now she is resting in the same old corner, but she is working still, for she, too, has her knitting and though the sock grows slow it grows sure, and the stitches run with the moments and keep up with them and there is no time lost or wasted. We men come in from the field, or the shop, or the store and sit down and do nothing; we smoke or talk or read the papers, but the old mothers are busy until bed-time and make no fuss about it either. It is a world of work to keep the clothes in order and to keep account of numberless garments that go out and come in from the washer woman. Then there are the sheets, and pillow cases, and table cloths, and towels and nobody knows what all but the mother.

The whole economy of life is in little things. The farmer thinks his cotton bales a big thing, and struts around them with pride, but the profit that is in them don't amount to much. His wife has saved him more money by her year's quiet unpretending work. A long time ago when I was a boy, my mother experimented in a small way with some silk worms and made a little sum of money, and she was very proud of her success. It cost my father nothing and not much of my mother's time—she reeled a few pounds of silk and sold it for $6 a pound. And so my father thought the silk business a big thing and he sent off and got cuttings from the Morus Multi-Caulis mulberry and planted two or three acres and in a year or two they were all ready for the silk worms, and he built him a two-story house and filled it full of racks and hurdles and it took my brother and me and all hands to attend to them. It was a nasty business and wore us all out, for when the worms got hungry and began to cruise round for breakfast they had to be fed and fed all over. So after while the mulberries were stripped and the worms were still hungry and my brother and myself had to get up long before day every morning and go five miles to another orchard after leaves and get back by sunrise and it wore us out, but we worried through with it and then when the cocoons were all made, we had another filthy job reeling off the silk in hot water and we made 140 pounds and sold it for 5 dollars a pound and quit the business. It was too big a business; and so it is with many things. They are too big. A little grist mill on a branch will make a man a good living, but these big ones that run by steam are risky ventures. A little country tan-yard makes money. The farmers' wives make money raising common chickens and turkeys and selling eggs, but these big henneries don't do much. Common folks can attend to little things and waste no time nor money, but when a man has to neglect his regular business, it won't pay. My father's silk venture called him from his store about half his time and what he made on silk he lost other ways.

His next venture was in the grape business. He got him some books on vineyards and wine making and how to make raisins, and so he planted four acres in English grapes, and after they got to bearing he pressed out the juice in large poplar troughs and strained it and put it away in barrels in a cellar, and after so long a time he sampled it and found he had a big lot of fine vinegar but no wine. He had no better luck with his raisins, and so he quit that business and stuck to his store. The store made money—a good deal of money, and he would have got rich but he was a Presbyterian and Presbyterians live too high when they have a store of their own. They have one customer that buys freely and never pays, and that customer generally keeps the concern on a strain. So he didn't get rich but he kept about even and we children had a good time and knew no wants, and did not learn much economy. A young man ought to be careful about marrying a Presbyterian girl if her father has a store; and a young girl ought to be just as careful about marrying a Presbyterian boy. Mrs. Arry made that mistake when she took me and I have kept her poor all the time. We have lived well, mighty well, but we are getting old now and there is not much laid up for the feeble days that are to come, nevertheless we are by no means alarmed and we have had a good time and seen our share of happiness. I think I know several rich men who have more money and less content. It is a mighty nice thing to have rich folks ways, but I don't know of but one class of people that can risk it without danger and those are rich folks who have no children. If a rich man has children he ought to raise them just as though he was poor. If he doesn't, they will be poor some day and then they are in a bad fix.

I bought Carl a pair of shoes about a month ago and one of them is nearly worn out now, for it was a Yankee cheat and I have to have it half-soled, but if I was rich I reckon I would throw them away and buy a new pair and that would be a bad lesson for Carl. I have to mend the chairs and patch the window glass, and stop the leaks in the roof, and fix up the chimney back, and make new handles for the rake and hoe, and fix the rollers on the bedstead, and do a thousand little things that cost money if you hire it done, and all this is household economy and must be practiced by ordinary folks, or they will come to grief. This is one of the advantages of living in the country where carpenters are not handy. Every farmer ought to be his own mechanic as much as possible, and teach his boys economy and contrivance. Little things make up life—little things are bigger than big ones, for they come all the time while big ones come seldom.

About that insect that has a turning lathe in its jaws and cuts off the persimmon limbs, I wrote about in my last and have since received a letter from Mr. Harrell, an observing friend in New Orleans, who says he was raised in North Carolina woods and had observed the same thing, and was for a long time perplexed about it. But he watched close and long and one day discovered that it was a large beetle or what we would call a big black bug. It had a curved projection from each jaw—curved like reaper hooks and on the inner edges were fine saws or notches like very small saw teeth and when his bugship felt like taking exercise, he grasped the limb between these saws and let all hold loose and opened his wings and flew round and round the limb with a buzz, holding on with his projected jaws all the time, and as he buzzed, he sawed, and as he sawed he buzzed, so together it was the original unpunished buzz-saw. It did not take him long to make his mark and cut in to the heart deep enough for the limb to fall, and as it fell the bug flew away to parts unknown. Now that is satisfactory as far as it goes, but still the question comes up, "what for?" My conviction is that the bug had already deposited its eggs in that limb and instinct said the limb must be cut off so that when the egg hatched, the larva could bed in the ground. The locust splits a limb and lays her eggs; the eggs hatch and the worm fastens its own web and swings to the ground. But this bug, I expect, has no web and so the limb must be cut off and fall. The Grant Income.

Gen. Grant's income has been derived from the interest on the quarter million subscribed for him a few years ago and from his pay, lately, as a retired General. Col. Fred Grant has no means, all his money having gone up with Grant & Ward. Ulysses S., Jr., is not likely to want, as his father-in-law, ex-Senator Chaffee, is very rich. Jesse Grant is practically poor—the only really settled child of the General being Nellie, whose position by marriage with a member of an old and wealthy English family places her beyond the reach of want. Philadelphia Times.

Medical Ignoramus.

The eyes of all the world have been directed to the case of Gen. Grant. It will very seriously impair public confidence in medical science and skill. At the same time it will encourage afflicted people not to abandon hope of life because the most learned doctors pronounce their malady incurable.

When their doctors give them up they need not give up themselves. That is the moral of Gen. Grant's case. It encourages the sick and suffering to hope for recovery from their disease, however sad the croakings of their medical advisers, provided they have the constitution to recover from their doctors and the good fortune to escape "heroic treatment."

Dr. Fordyce Barker, one of the consulting physicians, still adheres to the cancer theory. But it is in the teeth of other medical opinion and is refuted by the fact that Gen. Grant is recovering rapidly. It is not a feature of cancer that as soon as doctoring ceases convalescence begins.

The learned doctors who hacked and tortured poor Garfield to get out of the front of his body a bullet, which had buried in his back and released itself, kept persisting that that the lead had in some mysterious manner found its way from his groin, where their wonderful skill had mislocated it.

"Throw physic to the dogs!" was the exclamation of Macbeth. Probably if all the physic the cancer-credulous doctors gave to Gen. Grant had been thrown to the dogs and all their heroic treatment had been practised on cats the distinguished patient would before now have been driving in the Park and indulging in the luxury of a Reitha Victoria.

The whole of this prolonged case is anything but creditable to medical science. We cannot forget that at a consultation Gen. Grant barely escaped by his physical weakness from a painful and terrible surgical operation for cancer, which would have left him speechless for the rest of his life, and it is now acknowledged by some of these same experts that his is not a case of cancer at all.

However, if our confidence in the doctors has been impaired, our fear of cancer has also been shaken. It is not within the power of the physicians to tell us how many cases of so-called cancer have been heroically treated to death, which, had they been as publicly watched as this, might have turned out to be simple cases of ulcerated throat. A YOUNG LAWYER.—Bobby begged his mamma to buy him a drum. "I am afraid, Bobby," she replied, "that if I were to buy a drum grandpa might not like it very well."

"That wouldn't make any difference, mamma," Bobby argued, "cos you see, the drum ain't for grandpa; it's for me."

This conversation occurred a good many years ago, and Bobby, who is now a man, is practicing law successfully in Philadelphia. —Ex.

A Kiss by Moonlight.

From time immemorial, no one will pretend to deny the fact that kisses have been held in high repute by both sexes—whether active or passive. It has been decided that a LEGAL KISS implies ACTION on both parties; but when a lady simply consents to be kissed without action of her lips, it constitutes only a PASSIVE kiss—a sweet deprived of its nectar.

Smugly ensconced within a moss-embowered and vine-clad veranda, and almost hid from view amid sweet-scented honeysuckles, was seated a fair Atlanta nymph, whose beautiful dark eyes, alabaster complexion and voluptuous contour, seen of to DAZE the young gent by her side, who ever and anon, while circumnavigating her slender waist, gave her a BUSS and then a RE-BUSS to the amazement of a pedestrian who happened to be passing that beautiful moonlight night. At that moment the lover was heard to exclaim, "My dear darling Sarah Jane, you are becoming more beautiful every day; your eyes sparkle with more brilliancy, your once pale cheeks have been painted by the rosy tints of nature, and you seem to have entirely regained your health. Will you tell me the cause of this change?"

"I have simply used that wonderfully effective blood remedy known as B. B. B."

The Atlanta Constitution.

In a long article relating to B. B. B., of that city, says: "The Blood Balm Company started one year ago with $100,000, but to-day the business cannot be bought for $50,000." "The demand and the satisfaction given is said to be without a parallel, as its action is pronounced wonderful." "We are glad to announce that our druggists have already secured a supply, and we hope our readers will supply themselves at once." "It is said to be the only speedy and permanent blood poison remedy offered, giving entire satisfaction in all cases, before one bottle has been used. For Blood Diseases, Kidney Troubles, Scrofula, Catarrh, Old Ulcers, and Skin Diseases, try one bottle B. B. B. WOMAN!
"Grace was in all her steps,
Heaven in her eye,
In every gesture dignity and love."
So appeared Mother Eve, and so may shine her fair descendants, with the exercise of common sense and a proper treatment. An enormous number of female complaints are directly caused by disturbance or suppression of the Menstrual Function. In EVERY such case that, interfering and unfeeling specific, BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR, will effect relief and cure.
It is from the recipe of a most distinguished physician. It is composed of strictly official ingredients, whose happy combination has never been surpassed. It is prepared with scientific skill from the finest materials. It bears the stamp for constancy of strength, certainty of effect, elegance of preparation, beauty of appearance and relative cheapness. The testimony in its favor is genuine. It never fails when fairly tried.

BEAUTY PRESERVED!
Cartersville, Ga.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for many years from menstrual irregularity, and having been treated without benefit by various medical doctors, were at length COMPLETELY CURED by one bottle of Dr. J. Bradford's Female Regulator. Its effect in such cases is truly wonderful, and will make the remedy be called "Woman's Best Friend."
Yours respectfully,
JAMES W. STRANGE.
